Smoke and Fire

Cairo, Egypt, Jan. 10.—Several Italian cruisers were possibly damaged when bombs fell close in a heavy Royal Air Force raid on Messina, Sicily, last night. Several tons of bombs were dropped among the naval vessels in the harbor, upon the wharves, the docks and an oil storage plant.

The cruisers threw up a heavy smokescreen, preventing exact observation of damage done.

Fires were started in the wharves, near the drydock, and blinding greenish flashes with rumbling explosions were heard as bombs landed in the vicinity of the oil-storage plant.

Other bombs were dropped upon the army marshalling yards and oil tanks south of the harbor.

The text of the communique:

"A heavy raid was carried out by the bomber aircraft of the Royal Air Force on Messina, Sicily, during the night of January 9-10. Several tons of bombs were dropped on naval vessels in the harbor and on wharves, docks and oil-storage plants. One stick of bombs fell across cruisers in the south part of the harbor. Observation of the damage done was impossible, owing to a heavy smokescreen thrown out by the cruisers.

All Aircraft Return

"Another stick of bombs straddled the army marshalling yards and oil tanks to the south of the harbor. Fires were started at wharves and near the drydock. Other bombs fell very close to the oil storage plant, causing explosions with green flashes. All our aircraft returned undamaged to their base.

Daylight Air Attacks Smash Nazi Bases

London (Saturday), Jan. 11.—In a swift, hard-hitting aerial attack marking their biggest daylight raid thus far, strong forces of Royal Air Force bombers guarded by an escort of 100 fighter planes smashed Nazi-occupied air bases at midday yesterday.

They destroyed three German machines that tried unsuccessfully to chase them off and damaged others on the ground.

Germans Make 'Greatest Grain Deal in History'

New Series of Trade Treaties Signed; Details Withheld

By the Associated Press

Moscow, Jan. 10.—Soviet Russia agreed today to send to warring Germany quantities of food, especially grains, in a significant collaboration officially described as "an enlarged economic agreement."

(D. N. B., official German news agency, called it the "greatest grain deal in history" and said it was so arranged that it could be called "an economic plan" as well as a deal.)

Russia also will furnish industrial raw materials and oil products in exchange for German industrial equipment under the new treaty which runs until August 1, 1942.

Amounts were not specified, but Tass, official Soviet news agency, said the new pact provides for "deliveries considerably exceeding the level of the first year of operation" of an agreement which was signed last February 11 and of which the present program is an enlargement.

Fascists Retreat In Disorder From Albanian Base, Athens Reports

Copyright by New York Times

Athens, Jan. 10.—What may be regarded as the most significant single success yet achieved by Greek arms since the start of the Albanian campaign was announcd here today—the fall of Klisura.

Engagements here and there in this all-important sector have been prosaically reporteed during the past few weeks, but only in an unvarnished fashion with all details reserved as military secrets. However, it became known that the Hellenic soldiers in this area were performing daily feats of valor and endurance, which made it possible for them to seize high mountain peaks and capture enemy strongholds one after the other, and that all operations were being conducted under appallingly difficult conditions in the bitterest cold. Behind their curtain of censorship the Greeks were nibbling away at the Italian resistance like mice, until at dawn today they sprang like tigers.

The capture of Klisura represents an astonishing accomplishment. Time and again in history armies have fought for this village only to be hurled back. In itself, Klisura is unimportant and might be described as little more than a hamlet inhabited by Albanian peasantry, but as a strategic position upon a naturally fortified line, somethimes referred to as "Verdun," it is of the utmost significance. Wisely, the Greeks did not attempt a frontal attack but instead, bided their time, methodically taking heights to the east, and then after they once dominated Klisura, attacked it upon its more vulnerable flanks.

Athens Jubilant

The long hoped for victory of Klisura was announced in the early afternoon, and immediately as if its importance were recognized by all, the bells of Athens' churches started to ring. In less than five minutes main thoroughfares, by-streets and alleys of the city became a mass of blue and white bunting and Union Jacks.

Military bands blared out martial music intermingled with popular airs, the words to which are satirical commentaries upon Premier Mussolini and his Fascist crew—words which everyone here knows and sings today. In short, once again, the populace gave itself over to wild rejoicing and merriment at the Duce's expense.

It appears that the so-called "local operations" about Klisura turned out particularly satisfactorily to the attackers in the last few days, with the result that they were finally able to bring sufficient pressure to bear to capture the village itself.

Actual entry into Klisura, it is believed, took place early this morning after a night of ferocious fighting in which the enemy as if

Butler Named Minister Here To Help British Ambassador

Counselor Promoted, Will Take Care Of Routine Matters

The British government announced in London yesterday the appointment of Nevile Butler, counselor of the British Embassy here, as minister to the United States, a post created to relieve the new Ambassador, Lord Halifax, of routine details, the Associated Press reported last night.

The embassy, however, said it had received no confirmation of the appointment and refused comment pending official word from London.

It is expected Butler will remain counselor of the embassy with the additional title of minister. It was Butler, widely known in diplomatic circles the world over, who read a speech prepared by Lord Lothian at the American Farm Bureau Federation meeting the night before the Ambassador died.

He was educated at Harrow and Trinity College of Cambridge University and from 1930 to 1935 was private secretary to Prime Minister MacDonald.

Sen. Tobey Cries 'Perjury' as Testimony Of R. J. Reynolds and Oliver Quayle, Democratic Leaders, Fails to Agree

By John B. Oakes
Post Staff Writer

A suave young millionaire from North Carolina and an indignant Senator from New Hampshire verbally crossed swords yesterday at a hearing that ended with official revelation that at least $21,000,000 was spent in the 1940 political campaign.

After an hour's verbal duel between Senator Charles W. Tobey, New Hampshire Republican, and Richard J. Reynolds, newly-appointed treasurer of the Democratic National Committee, Chairman Gillette, of the Senate Committee Investigating Campaign Expenditures released a partial breakdown of the huge fund spent last year for the national election.

Pointing out that his figures did not include expenditures of individual candidates or of local political committees, Senator Gillette said that $21,746,475.11 has been reported thus far, but that his inquiry was "greatly handicapped" by the "reluctance" of some groups to report. The Hatch Act contains a $3,000,000 limitation on expenditures of a national committee in a single campaign.

Inauguration Fund Lagging, Fleming Says

Plans Proceed Apace For Event January 20; Traffic Rerouted

The third inauguration of President Roosevelt, January 20, will be "not only an inauguration but a defense for the world," former Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper said yesterday at the first general meeting of the inaugural committee at the Willard Hotel.

At the same meeting, attended by 400 members of various inaugural committees, Robert V. Fleming, chairman of the finance committee, said contributors to the guaranty fund were lagging, only 258 individuals and firms having subscribed $106,284 to the fund. At this time in 1937, he said, 320 donors had pledged $120,000.

Subscribers that year, Fleming said, received back 80 per cent of their donations, a percentage which would have been larger had not inclement weather held down grandstand sales. In 1933, he added, all subscribers received the full amount of their pledges and a surplus was turned over to the Community Chest.

Traffic Rerouted

Elsewhere, plans for the inaugural celebrations were reported shaping up smoothly, with arrangements completed for rerouting trolley and bus traffic along the line of march and the radio broadcasting feud relaxed for the duration of the parade. Of 16 marches to be played by bands in line, only two, "Anchors Aweigh" and "Stars and Stripes Forever," are controlled by A. S. C. A. P. These, it was understood, will be picked up by broadcasters

Judge, Feeling 'Like Pilate,' Jails Minister

Sentences Clergyman To Year for Failing To Register for Draft

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Jan. 10.—Federal Judge George A. Welsh declared today "I feel like Pontius Pilate" and then sentenced a 31-year-old minister to a year and a day in prison for failing to register for selective service.

The young minister, Arle Brooks, heard the sentence with a smile after he told a crowd that packed the courtroom:

"The United States is adopting a system of conscription which will produce tyranny instead of freedom.

"I feel it is my duty," Brooks said in a statement he read, "to do all within my power to protect against conscription which will eventually weaken and destroy democracy.

"I am not evading the draft. I am opposing it. I am defending democracy.

"The people of America are filled with fear of an invasion. Are we so morally weak that the power of one man could control 130,000,000 free people?"

Judge Welsh took Brooks, "I know you were motivated by your conscience," and added:

"America is not normal today and you must be charitable to the rest of us. There are countless millions, and many in this courtroom today who are in accord with many of the ideals you have expressed, and I feel like Pontius Pilate in having to do what my duty as a judge tells me I must do.

"But I must obey the law, no matter how much it hurts me, or even if it means my own life."

4 Children Slain By Headhunters In Philippines

Manila, Jan. 10 (AP).—Fierce Ilongot headhunters are on the warpath in Nueva Vizcaya Province and have beheaded four children in the village of Obog, the constabulary reported tonight.

The swarthy, long-haired mountain tribesmen pounced upon the children and their father last Tuesday. The father, badly wounded, escaped and gave the alarm.

The constabulary found the beheaded bodies of the children, but pursued the headhunters who escaped to the mountains.

'Kill-on-Sight' Order Issued for Obnoxious Elk

Roanoke, Va., Jan. 10 (AP).—A big bull elk—a stray from a herd in Giles County—has made himself so obnoxious in the closed wildlife area near Speedwell, Wythe County, that a "kill on sight" order has been issued to Deputy Wildlife Manager Virgil Boone.

At the office of the Jefferson National Forest, it was related here today how the elk recently visited the farmyard of W. B. Vaughan, near Speedwell, chased the cows all over the lot and finally broke down the barnyard fence. Another night he raided a cornfield belonging to Ad Groseclose, near Speedwell, uncovered seven piles of shocked corn and shelled some grain from each pile.

Just a few nights ago the elk called at Mr. Boone's cabin, caught a bee gum on his antlers, and either rolled or carried it 100 feet away to a spring.

"If only the bees hadn't been so cold," sighed Mr. Boone, who incidentally is a descendant of the famous pioneer, Daniel Boone, "we'd be one up on Mr. Elk now."

Army to Induct Some Objectors For Noncombatant Service as Selects

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

The Army disclosed plans yesterday to induct conscientious objectors into the military service and assign them to noncombatant duties.

Instructions were issued from the War Department covering the treatment of Selective Service trainees who claim religious scruples against fighting or bearing arms and whose status as objectors has been established. The orders declared that such men upon induction, should be detailed only to auxiliary units and not trained in the use of arms or required to bear them.

Officials said that only those objectors, such as Quakers and Seventh Day Adventists, who do not oppose entering the Army in noncombatant roles, will be inducted. Others who object to any military duty will be enrolled in civilian work, it was said.

Up to Officers

The War Department instructions made commanding officers responsible for enforcement of the rules against requiring objectors to bear arms or accept training in their use. It also listed the branches to which such men may be assigned.

They are the medical department, most units in the Quartermaster Corps except with fighting troops, various communications assignments, such as handling carrier pigeons and radio maintenance work, and some engineering and servicing duties.

Meanwhile the Navy clamped down a tighter restriction on release of information regarding the new Atlantic bases on sites acquired from Great Britain. Rear Admiral John H. Towers, chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics, declined to answer questions about them at a public session of the House Naval Affairs Committee. He declared he was acting in accordance with instructions just issued by the Chief of Naval Operations.

Plan Closed Session

Towers offered to furnish data about the bases to the committee in executive session, and Chairman Vinson said the group would meet behind closed doors soon to go into the matter.

Downtown, the Navy Department arranged for the expansion of facilities for turning out aircraft parts. Approval was given to a project to enlarge the propeller production capacity of the Curtiss-Wright Co. at a cost of $14,090,350, and to another for the construction of a plant at Cleveland, Ohio, costing $3,968,130, for manufacturing airplane engine crankshafts.

The Army announced that 100 first lieutenants and 1,130 second lieutenants of the Reserve, who are on active duty, will be promoted en bloc, to meet the requirements of new divisions for company and platoon commanders.

Fire Damages Hold Of Freighter Bearing Supplies for British

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 10.—Fire raged for an hour tonight in a freighter recently sold to the British and reported by police as ready to sail within 24 hours with a load of airplanes, Red Cross supplies and steel.

The blaze was confined to one hold of the Black Heron, sold to Britain three weeks ago by the Black Diamond Steamship Co., of Weehawken, N. J.

Police said the hold, which was badly damaged, contained blankets, bandages and other Red Cross supplies. Three bombing planes, which were lashed to the deck, were not damaged.

Mayor LaGuardia went aboard, talked to Capt. Walter Stafford, and then told newsmen:

"It is too early to determine the cause."

Later, Fire Marshal Thomas Brophy said he had "definitely established" that there was no sabotage.

Wife Discovers Joe Penner Dead in His Hotel Room

Heart Attack During Sleep Believed To Be the Cause

Philadelphia, Jan. 10.—Joe Penner, whose clowning on radio, stage and screen made millions laugh in a career of 15 years, died today—alone.

The 35-year-old funmaker—he made "Wanna buy a duck" and "You nasty man!" national by-words—was found dead in bed in his hotel, near the Locust Theater where he had been appearing in "Yokel Boy," a new stage show.

Deputy Coroner Bernard Dugan said death "apparently" was due to a heart attack. However, an autopsy was ordered.

Penner's wife found his body about 4:30 p. m. (E. S. T.). He had gone to bed about noon but had not complained of illness.

(With Penner's death "Yokel Boy" was no more. Bookings for the show, which Washington audiences enjoyed last week, were immediately canceled.)

Penner was born in Hungary, in a small town near Budapest, November 11, 1905.

His real name was Pinter.

Leaders Confident

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Supplied with a legislative blueprint for unlimited arms aid to Britain, a surprised Congress cleared decks yesterday for a showdown before two committees.

With the speed that the President asked, the blanket aid measure was introduced in both houses, referred to committees and a two-weeks' goal set for House action.

Cries of "war declaration" and indictments of Presidential powers rose from noninterventionist ranks in both parties, but leaders claimed popular support and the necessary strength to meet the test when it comes.

Terms of the "all out" measure for arming Britain, as disclosed in yesterday's Washington Post, were explained in their respective chambers of Congress by Senate Majority Leader Barkley and House Democratic Leader McCormack.

Party Lines Broken

The sweep of the measure caught both parties unprepared, but lines quickly formed along old cross-party divisions.

To the Foreign Affairs Committee sped the bill in the House. In the Senate the Foreign Relations Committee, in which the isolationist nucleus centers, prepared for simultaneous consideration.

Chairman Sol Bloom of the House group announced his committee would organize, with six vacancies to be filled, on Monday. Hearings will open the following day. Bloom said they may last for "three or four days," and the House at the latest would receive the bill with a right-of-way rule the following week. He predicted House passage in a fortnight.

Chairman George of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee called his group to commence action next Wednesday. Here the bill faces its most serious test and a major modifying effort. Leaders hope the bill will swing clear of the Senate committee in two weeks and move into the unrestricted field of Senate debate.

Fish Sees a Fuehrer

Strongest modifying effort was believed to be shaping in the Senate committee around proposed restriction on the President's power to tap existing defense equipment of the Army and Navy. One opposition plan was to prohibit the President from "weakening" this Nation's defenses in his arms loans to Britain.

ROMANCE AND REVOLT

Do you think you can tell a good movie plot when you read one? Then don't miss Sunday's novel, "East of Kashgar." See if you don't agree it would make a real movie. Here's the list of characters:

Yussuf Ben Sabbah,* leader of a Tungan revolt against th British.

Col. Thornton,* who thought a bum could redeem himself.

Michael Carruthers,* the bum.

Aileen,* his one-time fiancee.

Esmitt Beg,* a native boy with a Sam Browne belt.

THOSE IRISH BASES

The Chamberlain government gave up England's naval bases on the Irish coast, and the Churchill government would certainly like to get them back. Do you know why England claims the use of these bases would shatter the Nazi blockade? The map and accompanying articles in Sunday's Post may open your eyes.

And with this discussion of the problem of the Irish bases comes a very timely Gallup Poll on the subject. Gallup interviewers asked a cross-section of Americans whether they thought Eire should let Britain use the bases. And then Gallup had a special poll made of Irish-Americans! Both polls are reported—you'll find it interesting to compare the vote of the nation as a whole with that of Americans of Irish blood.

Others think he will simply ignore the Papacy.

Baruch Asks Public to Back Defense Setup

Prefers One-Man Control, but Says New Plan Will Work

Bernard M. Baruch, who, as chairman of the War Industries Board in the World War, was virtual czar of defense production, yesterday said President Roosevelt's revamping of the defense set-up was a "long forward step" and called on the public to give hearty co-operation.

BARUCH

He asserted, however, that he would prefer one-man control, instead of the two-man set-up created by Mr. Roosevelt when he gave William S. Knudsen and Sidney Hillman coequal powers over production.

Asked the reason for his preference, he replied that he has "always advocated one-man control because of my experiences in the World War. There should be a committee for consultation and there should be one man for action."

Not Critical

He pointed out, however, that he did not intend to be critical of the new arrangement, that he hoped the country would give full support to it, and that he believed it would succeed.

His statement follows:

"I have been asked for an opinion about the new order in production.

"I have had no opportunity of studying the details. Although I prefer to have the final decisions left to one man appointed by the President responsible to him alone, whose decisions would be revokable by the President, I should say undoubtedly that a long forward step has been taken. The action becomes the more important because it originates with the President and will be wholly supported by him.

Confidence in Leaders

"After all a plan is good only by virtue of its execution. I have confidence in Knudsen and Hillman and their associates, Secretaries Stimson and Knox, to do the job. If they can not work together, then what right have we to expect capital and labor to agree? But I am sure they can. This crisis calls for a united effort. But for them to do the job and even more important than the backing of the President, is the active and free participation of every element in our economy, and, above all, the strength and force of an undivided public opinion.

"Then again we shall see exemplified Woodrow Wilson's great statement that 'the highest and best form of efficiency is the spontaneous cooperation of a free people.' "

The "all-out" aid to Britain bill took the number H. R. 1776 today when it reached the bill clerk's office. The fact that the number coincides with the year of our independence was pointed out to officials, who said it was purely coincidental.

"The last bill bore the number 1775," a clerk said, "and as this bill was the first to reach this office today it was designated 1776 as a matter of routine. There was no request from any source that it be especially numbered."

Hopkins Sees Churchill, Says Axis Will Lose

President's Emissary Also Calls on Eden And Lord Halifax

By the Associated Press

London, Jan. 10.—Harry Hopkins President Roosevelt's personal envoy, and Prime Minister Winston Churchill talked for a long time over a luncheon table at 10 Downing Street today to start what Hopkins himself described as discussions on "matters of mutual urgency to our two countries."

To the press, afterward, the American emissary predicted that United States production of war materials would reach its peak in about another year, and declared flatly:

"I have no misgivings about the outcome of this war . . . There is going to be a united and altogether successful effort in the production of defense materials to be used by ourselves, Great Britain, Greece and China."

The luncheon lasted well into mid-afternoon and, even before that, Hopkins had seen Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden and Lord Halifax, who is going to Washington as the British Ambassador.

Hopkins said he would be in London from two to four weeks, or, "until I have finished the job I came to do."

To most of the questions fired at him, Hopkins replied "No comment." He did, however, predict "successful" labor cooperation in the American arms program.

He declined to guess about how long the war will last.

Hopkins arrived in London last night at the start of a heavy air raid, but he brushed that experience aside today and said "nothing is less important than my impressions of air raids."

With a grin, he said his valet had told him this morning that he would need some more English-type white shirts, without attached collars, and some long underwear.

After that, he said, "I had a very good breakfast with some good American coffee."

Local Girl Makes Good

JANET WERTZ,

Washington's winner of a hostess job with Pennsylvania Central Airlines—pretty and blonde Janet Wertz, 21—has never been inside a transport airplane.

She was selected with 19 other girls from among 50 who were put through their paces at P. C. A.'s Vice President J. J. O'Donovan at Wardman Park Hotel.

Miss Wertz, who has done a "little bit" of flying with a friend at Queens Chapel Airport, will leave a week from tomorrow for Detroit to begin a month's training course before assignment to a regular run.

Her interest in flying came from the few "hops" she took over Washington with her friend. Until she decided to compete for the P. C. A. job, she was a secretary at Jelleff's in F Street.

Poise, personality and an ability to converse on a wide variety of subjects were among the necessary qualifications. It was agreed by company officials that Miss Wertz has them all—plus.

She lives with her mother, Mrs. F. J. Wertz at 1809 Good Hope Road Southeast and has four sisters and a brother.

"I've had plenty of experience taking care of people at home," she said, "so I guess I'll get along all right in the new job."

Miss Wertz doesn't smoke nor drink and is president of the Presbyterian Young People's Organization of Washington.

Hoover Scores 'Surrender' Of Congress

Lend-Lease Bill Perils Democracy, He Declares

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 10.—Asked to comment on the Administration bill authorizing President Roosevelt to lend or lease war equipment to "democracies," former President Hoover issued the following statement today:

"The first thing Congress has to consider is the suggestion of enormous surrender of its responsibilities. No such powers were granted in the last war. So far as I know, no such surrender has been made by the British Parliament either in the last war or this war.

"We all wish our industry tuned up to maximum output for our defense and to aid other countries to defend their independence, but the practical surrender of power to take these steps that are possible under this legislation is something else. It enters the field of preservation of democracy in this country."

District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey, a candidate last year for the Republican nomination for President, issued a statement saying that "the President's so-called defense bill would bring an end to free government in the United States and would abolish the Congress for all practical purposes."

"There has been no refusal by Congress to support the victims of aggression," he said. "I am sure there will be none. The President has no right to assume that Congress lacks patriotism, or, in these times, will fail to do its duty swiftly and effectively."

Landon Sees Dictator Trend

Tulsa, Okla., Jan. 10 (U.P.).—Alf M. Landon tonight characterized President Roosevelt's "arsenal for democracy" bill to Congress as "the first step toward dictatorship by Mr. Roosevelt."

"It has not been 60 days since he spoke for peace and promised to keep this country out of war," Landon said.

The 1936 G. O. P. Presidential candidate will address the Alexander Hamilton Club Saturday at 7:30 p. m. (E. S. T.) and will be heard over a national radio hookup.

"Outrageous," Says Marshall

New York, Jan. 10 (INS).—The authority President Roosevelt asked Congress to invest in him so that the United States could carry out its "lend-lease" program of aid to Britain tonight was termed "an outrageous attempt" to set up a dictatorship at the White House by Verne Marshall, chairman of the No Foreign War Committee.

Marshall, who said that he will speak over the Mutual network on Sunday night at 11:15, E. S. T., on "There Shall Be Peace," issued a statement saying: "Mr. Roosevelt has asked Congress to surrender to him its exclusive war-making power and authority. He is asking for exactly that kind of dictatorial power which has so incensed him when exercised by governments elsewhere in this chaotic world."

Text of Bill to Lease Arms to Democracies

The text of the measure introduced in Congress yesterday to effect President Roosevelt's plan of lending or leasing military equipment to democracies follows:

A bill to further promote the defense of the United States, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this act may be cited as "An Act to Promote the Defense of the United States."

Section 2. As used in this act—

(A) The term "defense article" means:

(1) Any weapon, munition, air craft, vessel or boat.

(2) Any machinery, facility, tool, material or supply necessary for the manufacture, production, processing, repair, servicing or operation of any article described in this subsection.

(3) Any component material or part of or equipment for any article described in this subsection.

(4) Any other commodity or article for defense. Such term "defense article" includes any article described in this subsection; manufactured or procured pursuant to section 3; or to which the United States or any foreign government has or hereafter acquires title, possession or control.

(B) The term "defense information" means any plan, specification, design, prototype or information pertaining to any defense article.

Section 3 (A). Notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, the President may, from time to time, when he deems it in the interest of national defense, authorize the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, or the head of any other department or agency of the Government:

(1) To manufacture in arsenals, factories and shipyards under their jurisdiction, or otherwise procure, any defense article for the government of any country whose defense the President deems vital to the defense of the United States.

(2) To sell, transfer, exchange, lease, lend, or otherwise dispose of, to any such government any defense article.

(3) To test, inspect, prove, repair, outfit, recondition, or otherwise to place in good working order for any such government.

(4) To communicate to any such government any defense information pertaining to, any defense article furnished to such government under paragraph (2) of this subsection.

(5) To release for export any defense article to any such government.

(B) The terms and conditions upon which any such foreign government receives any aid authorized under subsection (A) shall be those which the President deems satisfactory, and the benefit to the United States may be payment or repayment in kind or property, or any other direct or indirect benefit which the President deems satisfactory.

Sec. 4. All contracts or agreements made for the disposition of any defense article or defense information pursuant to section 3 shall contain a clause by which the foreign government undertakes that it will not, without the consent of the President, transfer title to or possession of such defense article or defense information by gift, sale, or otherwise, or permit its use by anyone not an officer, employe, or agent of such foreign government.

Sec. 5. The Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, or the head of any other department or agency of the Government involved shall, when any such defense article or defense information is exported, immediately inform the department or agency designated by the President to administer section 6 of the act of July 2, 1940 (54 Stat. 714), of the quantities, character, value, terms of disposition, and destination of the article and information so exported.

Sec. 6 (A). There is hereby authorized to be appropriated from time to time, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the provisions and accomplish the purposes of this act.

(B). All money and all property which is converted into money received under Section 3 from any government shall, with the approval of the Director of the Budget, revert to the respective appropriation or appropriations out of which funds were expended with respect to the defense article or defense information for which such consideration is received, and shall be available for expenditure for the purpose for which such expended funds were appropriated by law, during the fiscal year in which such funds are received and the ensuing fiscal year.

Sec. 7. The Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the head of the department or agency shall in all contacts or agreements for the disposition of any defense article or defense information fully protect the rights of all citizens of the United States who have patent rights in and to any such article or information which is hereby authorized to be disposed of and the payments collected for royalties on such patents shall be paid to the owners and holders of such patents.

Sec. 8. The Secretaries of War and of the Navy are hereby authorized to purchase or otherwise acquire arms, ammunition, and implements of war produced within the jurisdiction of any country to which section 3 is applicable, whenever the President deems such purchase or acquisition to be necessary in the interests of the defense of the United States.

Sec. 9. The President may, from time to time, promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper to carry out any of the provisions of this act; and he may exercise any power or authority conferred on him by this act through such department, agency, or officer as he shall direct.

All-Out Aid Bill Sped to House Committee, Isolationists Forming Lines for Battle in Senate

mittee, Representative Fish, of New York, said he would propose modifying amendments "right and left." Fish favored arms loans to Britain, but said he opposed the sweeping power grant and "setting up of a fuehrer here." House leaders, who first moved the arms embargo repeal through the Bloom committee, felt assured of committee approval of the bill.

Surprise interpretation of one section of the bill as opening American navy yards for repair of British warships attracted opposition fire and became a favored target for amendment.

The proviso specified this Government could "test, repair, outfit, or otherwise . . . place in good working order any defense article."

Barkley and McCormack said this would apply equally to defense articles whether manufactured in the United States or not.

Their statement elaborated: "It could conceivably mean, for example, that the British battle cruiser Renown could be repaired in the Brooklyn Navy Yard if the President considered it in the interest of our national defense to do so. The provision is broad enough to permit the use of any of our military, naval, or air bases to outfit and repair the weapons of countries whose defense is vital to the defense of the United States."

Other sweeping provisions of the power grant, urged by party leaders in the interest of this Nation's own safety, waived all other laws in conflict, authorized appropriations without a limit, and empowered the President to dispatch any arms, including ships, to Britain and her non-Axis allies. He could divulge secret "defense information" as well, when in the interest of this Nation's defense.

Roosevelt Urges Speed

To his press conference yesterday the President said he did not necessarily want the power given in the bill, but that somebody has to have it so that quick action can be taken. He urged the greatest possible speed in enactment, as every moment lost by Congress delays the program.

Mr. Roosevelt explained that Latin American nations, as well as democracies at war could be aided under the plan if it were found necessary.

The President denied under questioning that the bill would have the effect of repealing the Neutrality Act and the Johnson Act. The phrase "notwithstanding the provisions of any other law," he said, was the usual one in legislation and was required to avoid conflict of laws. He explained that where there is conflict the later law supersedes the prior one.

Asked whether the bill would permit lending of destroyers, he said no one had suggested that and there was no reason to discuss it now.

A storm of pro and con comment off the floor followed introduction of the bill in both houses.

"Monstrous," Says Johnson

Led by Senator Hiram Johnson, of California, who called the bill "monstrous" and Senator Bennett Clark, of Missouri, who said it "authorized the President to declare war," the Senate's nonintervention bloc was immediately vocal.

On the Administration side, Barkley, the bill's Senate sponsor, said the situation called for "no beating around the bush" and Senator Connally, of Texas, asserted only quick aid to nations fighting against aggression can assure "survival of democracy and free government."

Conservative Republican opponents found themselves in line with extreme American Laborites. In the House, Representative Marcantonio (American Labor), termed the bill "totalitarian." Representative Vorys (Republican), of Ohio, who nearly thwarted arms embargo repeal with his famed Vorys amendment, called it "a streamlined, modern declaration of war and (it) should be considered as such." But he would not say how he would vote.

Speaker Rayburn's reference of the bill to the House Foreign Affairs Committee brought a protest from Chairman May of the House Military Affairs Committee. May told reporters he thought it was clearly a defense measure and should be referred to his own group. Later May called a meeting of his committee for today to consider its "rights."

After introduction of the measure, the Speaker recognized House Republican Leader Joseph W. Martin, jr., who protested that no Republican members of Congress were consulted in preparation of the bill. Martin asked if the bill was to be considered in a nonpartisan manner.

McCormack replied that he "assumed that national defense transcended party politics." Martin agreed that it did, but said "we should be given some consideration to the preparation of this program."

Representative Dirksen, (Republican), of Illinois, appealed for calm consideration of the issues, with "no center aisle" on the defense issue. "Let there be some restraint in our expression from now on, and let there be a fine degree of courtesy and generosity exemplified here at all times, because the time is not so far distant when we shall have to take counsel one with another and with no central aisle between as the welfare of the whole Nation hangs in jeopardy."

Other Congressional comment on the bill:

Senator Taft (Republican), of Ohio—No Congress except a rubber-stamp Congress would enact such a bill. I am unalterably opposed to it, and shall do all I can to defeat it.

Speaker Rayburn—If we intend to aid the democracies, which I think the overwhelming majority of the American people favor, it appears to me this is the practical and efficient way to do it.

Senator Johnson, of California—I decline to change the whole form of my Government on the specious plea of assisting one belligerent.

House Majority Leader McCormack—The bill properly delegates the power to the President of the United States—the only man in the United States in an executive position whose constituency is the entire country.

Senator Capper (Republican), of Kansas—I think it goes too far, but I will await developments in the Foreign Relations Committee to see what they bring out to justify this program.

Senator McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee—We should repeal all laws which would in any way interfere with our giving Great Britain all aid that the President or Congress might find necessary.

Senator La Follette (Progressive), of Wisconsin—This is not a request for a blank check. It is a demand that Congress abdicate vital and important powers.

Chairman Bloom of the House Foreign Affairs Committee—It accomplishes the purpose of giving aid to the other democracies, and I have no doubt that it will meet with the approval of the people of this country.

Senator Ed Johnson (Democrat), California—I shall listen with open mind to every word of debate on it, and I hope and pray that I shall be given Divine guidance in determining my vote.

Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Utah—The President should have the power (not specifically provided in the bill) to send American ships with supplies into combat zones.

Al Smith Urges Unity, Greater Aid to Britain

Suggests People View Situation More Seriously

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 10.—Former Gov. Alfred E. Smith declared tonight that "the big question" facing the United States was "whether or not, without declaring war, we can get wartime production."

In a Nation-wide broadcast under the auspices of the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies, he asserted that "up to the present time our people generally have not taken the situation seriously enough."

"They do not seem to realize that the era of business as usually conducted is over and that ordinary, easy-going living and peacetime pursuits must yield to defense," he said.

The former "Happy Warrior," said that "the Government at Washington must set up an efficient, powerful and responsible defense organization. The President must be prepared to delegate authority in the same way that President Wilson delegated it in 1917.

"All partisanship and personalities must be laid aside at this time if we are to have a united effort. Defense is not a Democratic Party program; to be successful it must be the program of all the people."

Smith, Democratic Presidential nominee in 1928, urged all possible aid to Great Britain and declared that "there is no conceivable ground on which any truce can be made or any lasting peace found with Hitler until the German people and their allies have learned that their gospel of force, hate, domination and destruction will not be tolerated by the free peoples of this world."

"Unfortunately," he continued, "we have among us a noisy, slick, well-financed group of appeasers, some of them agents of the dictators, some of them their willing or unwilling tools.

"This is a free country and this group is entitled to be heard in the public forum. It is best that they should be. It is only when they are driven underground that they really become dangerous."

Illness Plea Fails To Halt Princess' Deportation

San Francisco, Jan. 19 (INS).—The Hungarian Princess Stephanie Hohenlohe, ordered to leave the United States because of her Nazi leanings, is still in the San Francisco area, the Immigration Service office said tonight.

She has been ordered to leave the country by midnight tomorrow.

A plea that she be allowed to remain because she is too ill to travel was turned down by the Department of Justice, it was learned, after she was examined by two Government physicians.

Authorities refused to disclose the whereabouts of the princess, who recently had been rumored to be staying at the home of Capt. Fritz Wiedemann, Nazi counsul general in San Francisco.

British Socialists Plan Peace Offer

London, Jan. 10 (U.P.).—Delegates claiming to represent more than 1,000,000 British workers will meet here Sunday to discuss promotion of a Socialist "people's government" which, their leaders said, would be followed by a British "peace offer" to German workers over Adolf Hitler's head.

The "people's convention" is supported by the Communist party but its organizers denied they had been influenced by Communists. The movement is condemned by the Labor party as well as the Trades Union Council, which considers that the movement cuts across trade union lines. The movement advocates the independence of India, the ending of Irish partition and friendship with Soviet Russia.

Azana Relative Is Reported Slain

Geneva, Switzerland, Jan. 10.—Rivas Cherif, consul general for the Spanish republican government in Geneva and brother-in-law of former President Manuel Azana, was condemned to death by a special tribunal in Madrid and shot, it has just become known here.

He left Geneva shortly after the downfall of the republican regime in Spain, going to France, where he lived in Paris until the exodus last June. At that time, with his wife and children, he took a house south of Bordeaux, where he was captured when the Germans came in and handed over to the Franco regime.

Roosevelt Spending Week-End in Hyde Park

Mrs. Roosevelt accompanied the President. They were met at the station here by their daughter, Mrs. John Boettiger, and her husband, Seattle, Wash., publisher, who are spending a vacation in the East.

Ideas Will Spell Hitler's Doom, Asserts Thomas Mann

Right Must Eventually Defeat Might, Noted German Refugee Novelist Declares; He Will Lecture at Town Hall Tomorrow

By Gerald G. Gross

Post Staff Writer

Happiest when he is busy, which means he is a very happy man right now, Thomas Mann last night discussed a variety of topics, ranging from mind versus matter to the possible adaptability of some of his works to motion pictures.

The interview served as a sort of warmup for the lecture which the famous German emigre and Nobel prize winner will deliver at the Hotel Shoreham tomorrow night under Town Hall auspices.

With respect to mind versus matter, Dr. Mann reaffirmed his conviction that human thought is more powerful than weapons, that ultimately the Nazi might will give way to the right of ideas with which it is in conflict.

"Even Napoleon finally admitted, on St. Helena, that ideas are the more powerful," he reminded.

Dr. and Mrs. Mann arrived in Washington late yesterday from Princeton, N. J., where he has lectured on literature and philosophy since 1938. But they are going to leave Princeton soon, he revealed, to make their home in California.

That brings up the matter of movies. Living in close proximity to Hollywood, the writer is certain to be exposed to the industry, particularly since his brother, Heinrich, already is in film work and a good friend from pre-Hitler Germany, William Dieterle, is now a prominent director.

Few of his literary works are suitable for picturization, according to Dr. Mann, though he sees possibilities in his "Joseph and Egypt" and certain of his short stories which are not lacking in action.

Among other old friends whom the Manns will rejoin in California, where they will take up residence in March, are Bruno Frank and Bruno Walter.

Appearing in excellent health, the 65-year-old author who was forced to flee Nazi Germany said he and Mrs. Mann are eagerly awaiting their American citizenship papers, due in 1943.

He revealed that he is still doing his writing in German because "I fear I am already too old to switch over to English, as my son, Klaus, has done."

The distinguished visitor nostalgically recalled his last trip to Europe, in the summer of 1939, when he vacationed at places in Holland, Switzerland and Sweden which he loves so much. The war cut short his sentimental journey. He narrowly escaped capture by the Germans while en route from Sweden to London.

During the next few weeks, and continuing after the couple have moved to the West Coast, Dr. Mann will be busy filling a series of lecture engagements. Next on his calendar, after tomorrow night at the Shoreham, is Duke University, followed by the University of Georgia.

Serving on the panel for the Town Hall lecture, "This War and Democracy," which will begin at 8 o'clock, will be Senator Ralph O. Brewster of Maine; Dr. Ernest S. Griffith, of the Library of Congress, and Eugene Meyer, editor and publisher of The Washington Post.

Dr. and Mrs. Mann are house guests of Mr. and Mrs. Meyer.

Tommies Will Fight With Plowshares, Too

London, Jan. 10 (AP).—The ministry of information announced today that British soldiers are going to be called on to farm as well as fight.

In an effort to grow more food at home, which would release ships to carry troops and munitions, the fight-farm plan will call for cultivation of 20,000 war office acres by troops.

Railroad Executive, 64, Held In Mercy Slaying of Ill Wife

'Begged Me to Put Her Out of Misery,' He Tells Attorney

By the Associated Press

Kansas City, Kans., Jan. 10.—A railroad executive who said his invalid wife often "begged me to put her out of her misery" was arrested today after she was found in bed fatally wounded.

John E. Rockwell, 64, was charged with murdering his wife, Elizabeth, 62, to whom he had been married for 39 years. Rockwell is secretary-treasurer of the Kansas City, Kaw Valley & Western Railroad.

Police, responding to a call from the woman's physician, found Rockwell clad in pajamas and Mrs. Rockwell, wearing night clothing, unconscious from a bullet wound in the head. She died later in a hospital.

"I believed her disease to be incurable and I could not stand watching her suffer any longer," Rockwell was quoted by T. P. Palmer, Wyandotte County deputy attorney, as relating.

"This morning I woke up, and, lying on my side, looked at her as she slept. I must have been desperate. I have worried so much lately I hardly knew what I was doing. I reached under my pillow and quietly got my revolver.

"Without waking her I gently placed the muzzle against her head just behind the right ear and pulled the trigger. She moaned once and lay still. After that I don't know what happened until I saw the police in my room."

JOHN E. ROCKWELL,

Navy Bombers 'Blast' Fabric 'City' at Miami

Dive Attacks, Precision Flying Feature Show

By Devon Francis

Associated Press Aviation Editor

Miami, Fla., Jan. 10.—Navy dive bombers, simulating the devastating attacks made by German planes in both the Battle of France and the Battle of Britain, "wrecked" a portion of a wood-and-fabric city at the Municipal Airport today.

As nine Grumman planes attached to the Opalocka Naval Air Station shot toward the ground and then pulled up to race for altitude, buildings topped and flashes encircled the objective.

For safety's sake no actual bombs were dropped on the "city," erected a bare quarter of a mile from spectators' stand at the annual All-America Air Maneuvers. But the howl of the bombers' engines carried across the airport against a strong wind, and the men in the cockpits, fighting the momentary dizziness of "pullouts," demonstrated the technique originated in the United States for defense against an enemy bent on invasion.

The Navy's act silhouetted the military character of Miami's midwinter air show, held in an area which calls itself the "air Gibraltar of America."

Apart from the theatricalized attack, the most spectacular part of the program of this, the first of a three-day show, was the precision flying by pilots who presented the maneuvers being taught fresh thousands of Army and Navy student fliers as part of the vast national air rearmament program.

To the Immelman turns, devised during the war of 1914-18 for quick reversals of course in air fighting, Bobby Lupton, of Detroit, Dick and Jimmy Granere, of Birmingham, Beverly Roberts, of Charleston, S. C., Harold Johnson, of Springfield, Del., and Vincent (Squeek) Burnett, of Richmond, Va., added several fresh pages of maneuvers.

Windsors Expected To View Show

Miami, Fla., Jan. 10 (AP).—The Duke and Duchess of Windsor made plans today to fly from Cat Cay tomorrow for a day at Miami's annual midwinter air maneuvers.

Officials arranged to send a plane to the Cay, only 50 miles east of Miami, where the Windsors are visiting, and bringing them here for the afternoon.

British Aviator Arrives on Clipper

Baltimore, Jan. 9 (AP).—Griffith Brewer, British aviation pioneer and president of the Royal Aeronautical Society, arrived from Bermuda on the Clipper today.

Brewer, en route to Washington, declined to state the purpose of his trip, but said people weren't coming from England just on "visits" at this time.

Among the 15 other passengers were William Beck, United States Consul General in Bermuda, and his daughter, Elizabeth, 14.

Husband Spies On Wife, Shoots Her and Man

Richmond Woman Declares She Was Forced Into Tryst

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., Jan. 10.—Herman L. Snead, 28-year-old truck driver, was arrested tonight on two charges of felonious assault shortly after his wife and another man were shot in Snead's home.

Mrs. Dorothy Mae Snead, 23, was shot in the hip and suffered a broken arm in falling down the rear steps while fleeing the house. Florie L. Holzbach, 47, who is married and has a 25-year-old son, was shot in the head and mouth. Hospital attendants said his condition was critical.

Detective Dan Duling of the Richmond Police Department said Snead and his wife gave different versions of events that preceded the double shooting. Snead, Duling reported, gave this account:

Suspecting his wife was having an affair with Holzbach, Snead cut a hole in the floor of a closet next to the living room to their home, and after taking their 4-year-old son to the home of an uncle, returned to the house and entered the closet through the hole in the floor.

A short while later, his account went, Holzbach came to the house and began making love to Mrs. Snead. Snead could hear them kissing, but could not see them. He became excited, grabbed a pistol which was in the closet, opened the door into the living room and started firing. Holzbach fell to the floor after the first shot, but Snead continued shooting.

Mrs. Snead started to run and Snead drew a knife and started slashing at her. She ran out the back door. Snead went to the house next door, told neighbors to call the police, and waited on the front porch for them to arrive.

Mrs. Snead's account, the detective said, was that her husband accused her on Christmas night of having an affair with Holzbach. She told Snead this was not true. After an argument Snead told her he would kill her if she would not say she had had an affair with Holzbach. Fearing Snead might kill her she told him she had had an affair with Holzbach.

Tonight, Duling related, Snead told his wife to arrange a rendezvous with Holzbach. She knew her husband had returned to the house, but did not know what his object was.

Bread Trust Case Defendants' Bail Is Fixed at $6,000

Philadelphia, Jan. 10 (AP).—Bail was fixed today for 33 individuals named with 11 baking companies in the first indictments obtained in the Government's Nation-wide investigation of food prices. Court attaches said the trials here probably would be delayed until June.

At a conference between Government lawyers and Federal Judge George A. Welsh, a $5,000 bond was decided upon for all those named in yesterday's principal indictment, charging conspiracy to fix bread prices, plus an additional $1,000 for those named in a supplemental bill.

The Federal grand jury's action under the Sherman antitrust law yesterday climaxed an eight-month inquiry directed by R. McDonald Gray, special assistant in the United States Attorney General's office.

The companies, which serve eastern Pennsylvania, south Jersey, Delaware and eastern Maryland, are:

Continenal Baking Co., General Baking Co. and the Ward Baking Co., all of New York; Freihofer Baking Co., William Freihofer Baking Co. and Parkway Baking Co., all of Philadelphia; Fischer Baking Co. and Dugan Bros. of New Jersey, Inc., both of Newark, N. J.; Hazleton Bakeries, Inc., of Binghamton, N. Y.; Huber Baking Co., Wilmington, Del., and Capital Bakers, Inc., Harrisburg, Pa.

Legislature Won't Certify Governor

Jefferson City, Mo., Jan. 10 (AP).—A joint legislative committee controlled by Democrats refused tonight to certify the election of Forrest C. Donnell, a Republican, as Governor.

The inquiry was undertaken on charges of "broad irregularities" in the election.

Wife Discovers Joe Penner Dead in Hotel Room

to join his parents there in about 1915.

He was a choir boy and later began his stage career in vaudeville and musical comedy.

Mrs. Penner discovered the comedian's death when she went to his room to learn why he had failed to keep an appointment.

Dr. Louis Chodoff, hotel physician, said Penner had been dead "about four hours."

Shortly before 4:30 p. m., Robert Crawford, coproducer and general manager of "Yokel Boy," telephoned Mrs. Penner—telling her she was to awaken Penner.

She left the receiver off the hook, and went into the bedroom. In a moment she was back and screamed to Crawford "Get a doctor at once."

Penner's wife is the former May Vogt. She was a dancer in Joe's first New York show.

After his lunch, Penner had gone to his room with word to the desk that he was not to be disturbed. No calls were put through.

Crawford said that after the performance last night Martha Raye, the screen comedienne, who had come from New York to visit the Penners, went to a restaurant with them.

When the Penners returned to their apartment, Penner telephoned Crawford at 3 a. m. and Crawford said he "seemed to be feeling fine and in the best of spirits."

He remarked to Crawford, "Wasn't it a swell show tonight? The more I play the part the better I like it."

In "Yokel Boy," Penner played Elmer Whipple, a yokel boy, who leaves his farm in Massachusetts and goes to Hollywood, where he makes a hit.

Crawford said that there was no understudy for Penner, so there could be no performance tonight.

Deputy Coroner Dugan said it was "quite apparent" that Penner had died peacefully in his sleep. He was clothed in pajamas.

Penner started his theatrical career by entering amateur contests in Detroit, where his father was employed in a motor factory. For a time Joe himself worked first as a messenger and then as a clerk in the Ford factory.

His first real stage job was that of a mind reader's assistant. A comedian in another act on the bill failed to appear one night and Joe begged for the chance. From then on he was a comedian.

Several seasons in carnivals, burlesque and vaudeville followed before Penner got his first break—a job in the Greenwich Village Follies at $375 a week in 1926. He made his first radio appearance on the Rudy Vallee program in 1933 and was an immediate success. Four weeks later he was given a show of his own and won popularity the first year.

He also appeared in several motion pictures.

Penner was best known as "the duck salesman" and his "wanna-buy-a-duck" gag was his stock in trade. Later in his radio programs he made "you nasty man" a household byword.

Appeared in D. C. Last Week

Joe Penner opened at the National Theater here last week with "Yokel Boy," his first legitimate play, and had gone with the show directly from here to Philadelphia.

He was well known to audiences in the vaudeville days and had appeared at the Earle, old Keith's and the old Gayety. He also had been here several times in musical comedies and revues, always in his comedy specialty, never in a character part.

Hollywood Shocked

Hollywood, Jan. 10 (AP).—The motion picture capital was shocked today to learn of the death of Joe Penner.

Jack Oakie, one of Joe's closest friends, said he had lost "a real pal with a really big heart."

He was one of the most generous men in the show business," said Allan Jones.

"I am greatly shocked at Joe's death," said Irene Hervey.

Cousin Doubts Von Luckner Is On Sea Raider

Says She Got Letter Recently Stating He Was in Sanitarium

New York, Jan. 10 (AP).—Paula Davis Luckner, who identified herself as a cousin of Count Felix von Luckner, celebrated sea raider of World War days, said today that she doubted very much that he was operating in the Pacific or anywhere else in war activity.

Reports that he had been in the Pacific recently "just couldn't be true," she said. "I have a letter from him four months ago. He was in a Vienna sanitarium then, because of a stomach ailment, and he told me:

"I'm sick and tired of war. I'm certainly not going to enter this one. I had enough the last time."

Miss Luckner, now a night club singer, practiced law in Niagara Falls, N. Y., after she was graduated from the University of Michigan. She said Count Felix's father was the brother of her father, Herman Theodore von Luckner, who lives in Battle Creek, Mich.

Australia Closes 4 Radio Stations As Informing Nazis

Wireless—Copyright by New York Times

Canberra, Australia, Jan. 10.—Navy Minister W. M. Hughes, in discussing the closing of four wireless stations yesterday, revealed today that one station had indicated the whereabouts of Australian ships, which might have made them a prey to German raiders.

All four stations, or some of them, broadcast information which might have been valuable to the enemy and would certainly have been detrimental to Australian interests. Raider survivors have shown that precise information on shipping movements is reaching the enemy.

Another broadcasting station is suspected of having revealed the position of a vessel concerning which a raider captain told victims already aboard his ship that he would meet it on a certain day at a certain hour. It was assumed that the information was given unwittingly.

Shipping men allege that German-born seamen with American naturalization papers who have not lost their German sympathies, wander too freely through Australian ports, and fear that some are collecting information for German agents in the United States.

Glass Plans Bill To Outlaw Bank Holding Companies

By the Associated Press

Senator Glass (Democrat), Virginia, soon may introduce far-reaching legislation designed to wipe out bank holding companies by June 30, 1944.

Glass proposed legislation to restrict bank holding companies some time ago, but it never has been approved. Recently, it was learned, he has been working with Treasury officials on a new bill.

It was reported authoritatively that the new legislation would include a "death sentence" for bank holding companies by providing that no banking institution (or corporation) could hold more than 10 per cent of the stock in any other bank after June 30, 1944.

Penner Broadcast

Radio Station WINX will broadcast a memorial program to Joe Penner, comedian who died yesterday, from 6:45 p. m. to 7 o'clock today. The broadcast will consist of a recording made by Penner when he appeared at the station last week for an interview.

Rome Claims Hit on British Battleship

British Deny Report; Duce Orders Fascism's Spread in Albania

By the Associated Press

Rome, Jan. 10.—Destructive blows against Allied naval power and shipping, including a bomb-hit on a British battleship; the sinking of two submarines, and attacks on four merchant vessels were announced today by the Italian high command.

The high command reported also that Fascist planes "hit about 100 enemy mechanized vehicles" in the Libyan Desert, while other British mechanized equipment was destroyed by artillery fire at Tobruk and Italian warships shelled "enemy coastal positions" in the Greek campaign.

The widespread Italian sea and air thrusts were accompanied on the political front by an order from Premier Mussolini for "more effective action" by the Fascist Party among the Albanian masses and a renewed Italian press assault on British-American collaboration.

The bombing of a British battleship (unofficially denied in London) occurred in a raid on an eastern Mediterranean naval formation, the Italian command said. It said one British plane was shot down, but acknowledged two Italian aircraft failed to return.

One of the two submarines sunk by Italian torpedo boats, the communique said, was the 1,400-ton French Narval. (Loss of the Narval, first French naval unit employed on Britain's side, was reported by "Free French" headquarters in London yesterday.)

Italian submarines operating in the Atlantic were said to have sunk the 2,883-ton Greek freighter Anastasia and the armed British ship Shakespeare. Other submarines were credited with torpedo hits on two vessels in a Mediterranean convoy.

The 100 British motor units said to have been hit by Fascist warplanes were headed toward Acroma, about 100 miles south and slightly west of Tobruk, the principal remaining Italian stronghold in eastern Libya.

Other Italian planes were credited with bombing Salum, Egypt, and machine-gunning tents and armored cars in east African areas near Kassala and Sciusceib.

Only "local actions" and artillery activity on the Albanian front were reported by the Italian command, but it claimed effective bombardment of Greek coastal positions and hits on antiaircraft emplacements at an "enemy naval base."

(In Athens, the Greeks announced they had captured Klisura, a strategic point on the central Albanian front.)

An official announcement placed Italian losses for December in the war with Greece at 8,951 men, including 1,301 killed, 3,052 missing and 4,598 wounded.

Premier Mussolini's order for more concerted Fascist Party activity in Albania was given to Tefrik Mboria, head of the Albanian branch.

Virginio Gayda, Fascist editorial spokesman, charged in Il Giornale d'Italia that Prime Minister Churchill sought to establish "Anglo-Saxon domination of the world."

realizing fully how costly would be the loss of this key position in terms of general strategy and prestige, held out as long as possible, capitulating only when the Greeks burst in on them with fixed bayonets.

Official general headquarters communique, received late last night, stated that 600 men and 20 officers were captured during the course of the battle. Material, including four guns and an unspecified number of tanks, trench mortars, automatic rifles, machine-guns and also one battle flag came into Greek possession. The communique also states the Greek air force had been active.

Klisura was not only a natural stronghold but contained fortifications of a modern and complex nature. It is said that trenches had been dug in the streets and that there were subterranean passages from one stronghold to another. Recently, Blackshirt units had been sent there from Italy. For weeks the Italians had been accumulating large supplies of ammunition and food. Recently the Italian air force concentrated over this region.

Tonight, it is reported, some of the Greek forces have advanced north of the Tepeleni-Klisura line in the direction of Berat, while others are busy mopping up and capturing new strategic positions.

It is pointed out here that the Italian communiques, as well as explanations for the turn of events given over the Rome radio, are becoming increasingly feeble. Commenting upon the activity of the Italian eleventh army, which, according to Rome, has been doing great things against the Greeks, the official spokesman tonight said that the reverse of this picture offered by the Italians was true, and that the Greeks in a recent engagement with this army succeeded in capturing seven of its officers, 450 soldiers and a great quantity of other material.

It was also said that 400 of the enemy had been killed in action and that efforts at reinforcement had failed. The spokesman did not reveal where this eleventh army had been engaged, but presumably it was not in the Tepeleni-Klisura area, but somewhere further to the east.

It is noted here that the Italian high command's communique tonight mentions that naval units shelled Kreek positions. Nothing is known here of any action whatsoever in which the Italian navy took part, except that during the night of January 6-7, two Italian destroyers and three motor launches attempted a landing on the tiny island of Kinoras, which lies a few miles to the northeast of the island of Amorgos, a part of the Cyclades group.

Two hundred men are said to have gone ashore there and to have machine-gunned whatever they saw. They saw nothing but rocks. The inhabitants of the island, two shepherds, had taken hiding in caves where they remained until the expeditionary force had retired.

There were sheep and goats on the island. The Italians did not wait until daylight to seize them, but fled, instead, at dawn. It is believed the Italians went in search of food, for the Dodecanese garrison, reported to be suffering from a serious shortage.

British Siege Batteries Open Fire on Tobruk

Army Cuts Across Desert for Bengasi; Kenya Post Retaken

By the Associated Press

Cairo, Jan. 10.—British batteries shelled Italian-held Tobruk today in the initial blow of an attack patterned after that which reduced Bardia, 50 miles to the east, five days ago.

Nearly cut off by an encircling movement of British mechanized units 50 miles to the west, Tobruk was rapidly being surrounded by British land forces, while its perimeter of outer defenses was battered by big siege guns rolled into place from Bardia.

The British, conceding it would take some time to bring up their full siege strength, said it was too early to speak of an "assault."

The seacoast town—if the Bardia pattern is followed—faces not only a heavy attack from land but severe bombing from the air and shelling from the sea.

Such a triple offensive reduced Bardia in 18 days and resulted in the capture of its garrison of more than 30,000 soldiers.

In another sector far from the Libyan front, British land forces were reported advancing almost at will across Italy's African empire.

Some 2,500 miles to the southeast, the British general headquarters reported that troops of the reinforced South African army had recaptured Buna, in the Moyale sector of Kenya, which the Italians have held for months.

In between, there were reports that revolting tribesmen in Italian conquered Ethiopia were attacking airdromes and cutting the Italian lines of supply to the Kenya sector.

British dispatches said there was no sign of Italian opposition at Buna, which is an important road junction point 100 miles south of the Ethiopian border.

The British indicated their forces had carried the fight also to Italian East Africa in the Kenya-Italian Somaliland border zone where they reported the Fascist troops had abandoned El Wak.

While Tobruk was being put under siege, the British sought to drive a corridor across the "hump" of Libya to cut off the whole province of Cirenaica.

This would put the British advance guard on the Mediterranean at the base of the Gulf of Sidra, 300 miles from the Libyan-Egyptian frontier, and isolate both Tobruk and Bengazi.

strength, returned home safely, according to air ministry officials.

Friday's daylight raids on Pas de Calais were the immediate aftermath of widespread forays Thursday night wherein British bombers struck Brest for the third time this week, and hammered docks in Flushing, Dunkirk and Calais, the oil depots at Rotterdam, Gelsenkirchen and other points in the Ruhr, as well as objectives in Norway. Everywhere they went they scored successes, British officials here said.

"Fire Blitz" Carried Out

[Hundreds of high-explosive and incendiary bombs were rained on a south coast town in England last night and early today in a furious German air attack, the Associated Press reported.

[The British Press Association said it is feared there were many casualties. Six churches, several theaters and a number of business premises were reported damaged. Communications facilities also suffered.

[The area raided included residential districts, a number of persons being made homeless.

[A first attempt to start a "fire blitz" on the town was turned back early last night by R. A. F. fighter planes. Then a second and larger wave droned in from the sea some time later under more favorable attacking conditions and "smothered" the town with incendiaries and explosives.

[One high-explosive bomb fell directly on an air raid precautions post, blasting it to bits. Many casualties were feared to have resulted.]

Residents of southeast coast town cast questioning eyes to the sky shortly after noon yesterday when the loud drone of airplane motors was heard. They saw many British planes flying in close formation, as they headed for France at a low enough altitude to make their markings reassuringly distinguishable. Shortly afterward, the planes disappeared over the French coast. Then residents of the town heard the muffled sound of antiaircraft fire and the noise of bombs. They said to each other, the R. A. F. must be at it again.

They were right. British raiders were diving through a big barrage of German antiaircraft guns at Calais, and Cap Griz Nez, bombing and machine gunning every air base assigned to them.

In the forests of Deguines near Calais, incendiary bombs started fires and caused a nearby railroad station to give off a pillar of white smoke. One low level attack was made on gun positions and enemy troops in the vicinity of Wisant.

A number of German planes, standing on the ground at the Guines airport, was mostly machine-gunned by the Polish pilot on one Hurricane fighter plane from a low altitude. As the Polish flier darted away two Messerschmitts came up to challenge him, but he sent one of them spinning to the earth in a death spiral.

With his throttle lever jammed the Pole made his way the best he could back across the Channel, just above the waters, and landed safely at his base.

Two other German planes were destroyed in the course of a big raid in which, according to the air ministry, only a few enemy fighters had enough courage to challenge the big British formations which seemed to have had things all their own way. One unit of a formation wound up its task by making a dive-bombing attack on an objective between Calais and Boulogne, rejoining its main body of attackers and coming home without further incident.

En route for home after their raid, the fliers spotted four German patrol boats. Two fighter machines swooped down to the vessels, spraying them with machine-gun bullets.

For more than six hours Thursday night and Friday morning British bombers roared over Brest, repeatedly bombing the docks and storage buildings. An observer aboard one of the homecoming planes reported that he saw two bombs make a direct hit on a large vessel of some kind or other. Other bombs burst on the jetty between the docks. Drydocks and buildings were also hit. Afterward black columns of smoke curled up slowly to a height of several hundred feet.

[A large formation of British bombers with heavy fighter escort tried to cross the French coast into German-held territory today, but were turned back by Nazi fighter planes, the official DNB news agency was quoted by United Press from Berlin. DNB set the probable British losses at nine. In addition to the planes shot down by the fighters, it said, antiaircraft batteries downed three Blenheim bombers and one Hurricane fighter, while the destruction of two more Hurricanes "can be considered certain."]

On the raids to Germany, which were confined principally to the Ruhr with oil plants at Gelsenkirchen as the chief objective, two planes were lost.

London Surveys Damage

London and other municipalities yesterday tallied the losses in lives and property damage done during the German raids over this country Thursday night and Friday morning while recovery work such as the removing of debris and the searching for bodies of the civilian victims of enemy bombs went on.

After struggling for nearly an hour yesterday to break open a postoffice safe lock which had been welded solidly by the heat of flames started by one fire in London Thursday night, the workers succeeded in cutting through the steel and recovering £40,000 in treasury notes, postal orders, postage stamps and national insurance stamps, all of which was found not to have been even singed.

expects to obtain the required grain may have been answered in Buenos Aires, Argentina, where informed sources said a Soviet trade mission already was en route to negotiate a "giant trade agreement" based mainly on grain. The Argentine minister of agriculture said, "We are ready to sell anything to anybody.")

Tass said the new agreement "constitutes a further stage in the execution of the economic program outlined by the two governments in 1939."

It said the negotiations "passed in the spirit of mutual understanding and confidence to the friendly relations existing between the U. S. S. R. and Germany," and added that "all economic problems, including those which arose in connection with incorporation of new territories in the U. S. S. R. were solved in conformity with the interests of both countries."

The trade agreement was in fact one of five compacts signed here today. The others dealt with such subjects as mutual border revisions and settlement of property claims and migrations connected with Russia's absorption of Latvia, Estonia and Lithuania.

Gen. Arnold Discusses U. S. Plane Problem

Cites 'Over Optimism,' But He Has High Hopes for Future

Despite possible over-optimism at the beginning of the Nation's air force expansion program, "we have high hopes for the future," Maj. Gen. Henry H. Arnold, chief of the Air Corps, said in an address before the National Geographic Society last night.

The Army's air defense program, he explained, leaped from a 5,500-plane objective in 1939 to 20,000 in 1940 and the Air Corps now is faced with the task of manning, training and equipping 54 combat groups instead of the 24 planned a year ago. He exhibited slides showing how the Air Corps had planned bases to train the personnel for this force at inland points and established tactical bases along both coasts.

Another Side to Problem

"There was another side to the problem," he said, "that of aircraft production. It was perhaps the most critical element in the expansion program. It takes time to build airplanes. In peacetime, 18 months were required to turn out the new model of a bombing plane. We of the Air Corps thought this time might be cut down somewhat by building in larger quantities, but found that modernization with self-sealing tanks, increased fire power and armor gave the industry little opportunity to cut down on the time required for production. And I assure you that these improvements spell the difference between an effective fighting plane and one that is easy meat in modern aerial combat. So today we still find that it takes more than a year to build a modern combat plane."

Though the task of meeting the Army's requirements will tax the capacity of the industry to the utmost, he said, "we will not be satisfied with anything less than the best."

"Our industry was given a tremendous task, for simultaneously with the Army expansion program it had to meet one almost as large for our Navy—and then, superimposed upon those two, there were those very important and exceptionally large orders from Great Britain, orders which we are very glad that our industry can fill. All together the industry was called upon to produce some 30-odd thousand planes in about 2½ to 3 years.

High Hopes for Future

"As should be expected, the industry took the first part of its expansion in its stride, but then it became much harder. Perhaps we expected to reach our objectives too soon. Perhaps we were too optimistic, as the experienced personnel in the plants was spread too thin—almost impossibly thin, but in spite of that, the bottlenecks are being eliminated one by one and we have high hopes for the future."

Gen. Arnold traced the history of flying and the history of the Army Air Corps. His lecture was illustrated with slides.

Copper, Brass Placed Under Export Curb

Bronze, Zinc, Nickel, Potash Also Are Put On Restricted List

By George Bookman
Post Staff Writer

Striking a double blow at shortages of vital raw materials and at leaks in the blockade of Germany, President Roosevelt yesterday placed copper and five other commodities under export license control.

Effective February 3, Government licenses will be required to export copper, brass, bronze, zinc, nickel and potash.

The action lengthening the list of articles under jurisdiction of Col. Russell Maxwell, Administrator of Export Control, was taken for the following two reasons, officials said:

To conserve supplies vitally needed for national defense.

Says U. S. Needs Copper

Asked at a press conference whether copper was placed on the controlled list because it was reaching Germany by way of the Far East, President Roosevelt replied that copper was included because the United States needs it.

Japan was the largest purchaser of copper in the United States last year, taking 225,065,811 pounds. Russia, a relatively small purchaser before the war, moved into third place with 108,955,900 pounds. Great Britain, taking 137,937,735 pounds, was the second largest buyer.

Japan's purchases have increased rapidly during the past few months, officials said.

Metal Bought From Chile

Domestic considerations also bulked large in the decision to clamp the export controls on copper, it was said. Officials pointed out that current United States production of refined copper was 900,000 to 1,000,000 tons a year, all of which is being consumed. In addition, the Metals Reserve Corporation recently bought 100,000 tons of Chilean copper.

A definite pinch in supplies of copper, with possible priority rationing, is expected by some Government authorities for later this year.

Copper was rationed during the World War, by requiring manufacturers who used it for nonessential products to use substitutes.

The country's zinc production of about 55,000 tons a month is being used up by domestic and essential export requirements, officials explained.

Brass Needed for Guns

Imports of the metal in 1939 totaled 36,100 short tons, while total exports were 14,360 tons.

Bronze and brass are alloys of zinc and copper. They reflect the same supply and demand conditions that influence the primary metals. Brass, in great demand by the British for gun manufacture and other uses, and bronze have been put under control primarily because of the domestic situation, it was said officially.

Nickel, produced in negligible amounts in the United States, was placed on the control list primarily as a move against Japanese-Soviet-German cooperation, it was learned.

Officials have noted great leaks toward Germany in exports of nickel.

Nickel Exports Jump

American exports of nickel in January, last year, were 2,668,770 pounds, valued at $815,763. Of this total, 24,736 pounds ($14,995) went to Japan, comparatively a small amount.

Nickel shipments to Japan began jumping upwards in September. Sales to Japan that month were 214,670 pounds, valued at $110,192, out of sales to the world at large of 445,511 pounds, worth $119,109.

The next month, October, showed nickel sales to Japan of 634,978 pounds ($255,253), out of sales to all countries of 1,279,267 pounds, worth $532,745.

Sales of nickel to Japan declined somewhat in November, the latest month available, to 512,498 pounds, worth $200,333, while total exports rose to 1,460,917 pounds ($543,959).

Potash on the List

Potash has been placed on the list, it was understood, in order to protect American farmers.

Before the World War all of America's potash came from Germany. Following that conflict sources of supply were developed here by the Government's leasing Federal lands to private producers. The chief such lands are near Carlsbad, N. Mex.

At the outbreak of the present war the Federal potash deposits were producing about half our needs. The substance is used for fertilizer as well as an ingredient in black powder.

Placing it under export control may mean that the best grades will be reserved for American farmers, while inferior grades will be earmarked for export. The reverse of this has been the procedure in the past, in many instances.

Finns to Hold To Neutrality, Procope Says

Minister Expresses Gratitude to British For Navicert Promise

The Finnish Legation last night issued the following statement by the Minister of Finland, Hjalmar J. Procope. Procope is in New York.

"I am very grateful that the British government in its statement to the press this morning has officially and publicly recognized Finland's independent status and that assurances are given that Great Britain will issue the necessary navicerts for the passage of supplies to Finland through the British blockade.

"There is no question of Finland's firm intention to continue to maintain its neutrality. Finland has never at any time enmeshed itself in international political intrigue. Finland last autumn made transit agreements with Russia and Germany. The fact that unarmed soldiers were allowed to pass through does not imply that there are foreign garrisons in Finland. Finland is not occupied or under foreign rule.

"We firmly adhere to the belief that a Nation and a people are advanced through hard work and frugality. Finland is determined to maintain political independence for its people. Our freedom and our independence are our most priceless possessions.

"In expressing my gratitude for the clarification of the British position, I wish to emphasize that it does not of itself insure adequate food and clothing for my people this winter. We must first find the money with which to buy the huge quantities of grain, fats, dried fruits and other foodstuffs and clothing before we can ask for navicerts. I am, however, hopeful and confident that these supplies will be forthcoming from some source. It does not seem to me that the immutable law of justice will permit my people to starve and freeze this winter."

D. C. Seeks Service School Quota Boost

The Commissioners yesterday sent to Congress two bills designed to increase the District quotas at West Point and Annapolis.

The quota at the U. S. Naval Academy would be increased from 5 to 15 and the Military Academy quota from 5 to 9, if passed by Congress.

French Ships Carrying Beef May Try to Run the Blockade

Four Other Freighters at Buenos Aires Prepare for Voyages; De Gaulle Officials See Nazi Attempt to Create Incident

By the Associated Press

Buenos Aires, Jan. 10.—The 8,000-ton French merchantman Mendoza, partly loaded with beef, sailed today for Montevideo to complete its cargo for what appeared to be the first attempt by a French ship to reach home from this country since the German conquest of France.

Informed sources, speculating over the Mendoza's plans, said the British consul had not been asked for navicerts (prior navigation certificates to permit passage of the British blockade).

Questioned last week when the French government bought a thousand tons of frozen Argentine beef and sought to purchase an additional 4,000 tons, Louis de Robien, the French Ambassador said:

"I regret I am unable to say anything."

Preparing for Voyages

Other embassy officials explained the Mendoza and four other French merchantmen in the harbor were being prepared for voyages under orders of the French marine minister "who alone would be able to comment."

The Mendoza's defensive cannon apparently had been removed. The drab war paint she formerly wore was covered with brighter hues. Two huge painted French flags gleamed from her sides.

Diplomatic sources were puzzled by the preparations as well as the sailing in view of what they called a virtual certainty that British warships would seize the merchantman as soon as it was on the high seas in compliance with announced blockade plans.

A "Free French" committee at Buenos Aires charged the sailing preparations were German-inspired to "create a fresh incident between England and France."

Might Be Escorted

The possibility that a French destroyer from Dakar, in French West Africa, would attempt to escort the food ships, the committee added, would "just make the incident bigger."

The other French merchantmen reported being prepared for sailing are:

The 9,586-ton Aurigny, the 10,816-ton Campana, the 9,975-ton Formose and the 3,891-ton Katiola. The Katiola was the first merchantman to leave France for South America after France's collapse to the German invasion.

The other ships have been in port since the armistice.

Bulk of British Wealth Here Declared Used

Is Committed Against Future Deliveries, Reserve Board Says

Copyright by New York Times

The British Empire had $7,115,000,000 of gold and dollar resources in the United States when the war began and in the intervening 16 months only a small part of this indicated value has in fact been converted into cash, the Federal Reserve Board reported yesterday.

"Emphasis should be placed," observes the Reserve Board, less on the extent of British resources than on "the difficulties of realizing within a short period the full cash value indicated for security holdings."

It points out another aspect of the situation "which greatly alters the significance of any figure for British resources derived from regularly published data." This is "necessity for acting in advance of deliveries. It has been necessary for the British to make substantial payments to finance expansion of plant needed to fill their orders and even greater sums have been paid out for goods in process of production on which delivery will be taken in the months ahead. Furthermore, the resources still in British hands are subject to commitments that have been incurred on the great mass of orders placed, but not yet paid for."

Companies May Be Sold

Interesting in connection with the present attempt to form a syndicate to take over from the British and sell to the public some of the subsidiaries of British corporations in the United States is the board's statement that "so-called direct investments—i. e., investments representing controlling interests—may be almost impossible to convert into cash; or, again, if entire companies can be sold as going concerns, they may offer the best means of raising a large lump sum within a short period. Some of the great British interests in American insurance, textile and oil companies might, if a favorable opportunity offered, be so handled."

The report lists British Empire gold holdings at the end of August, 1939, as $2,735,000,000; investments in American marketable securities, $1,575,000,000; investments in British-controlled enterprises in the United States, $1,330,000,000; dollar balances, $1,050,000,000; miscellaneous investments, $425,000,000. Since the war began the British Empire has also produced about $1,100,000,000 worth of gold and sold $1,400,000,000 of goods to the United States. Drafts upon the aggregate of these gold and dollar resources have been made to pay for $2,600,000,000 worth of goods already delivered by the United States and to cover substantial withdrawals of capital from England as well as for other purposes.

Exports Will Soar

The future volume of exports from the United States to the British Empire will depend mainly on the rapidity with which American production can be expanded and upon official policy regarding deliveries. If rapid progress is made in production and the British share of the output is increased it is possible exports to the empire may attain a level of $3,500,000,000 in 1941 as against approximately $2,100,000,000 in 1940, says the report. This would mean a United States export balance with British countries in 1941 of considerably more than $2,000,000,000.

War Prisoners To Get Packages From Red Cross

Americans who wish to send packages to friends or relatives in European military prison camps may do so through Red Cross chapters throughout the Nation, the American Red Cross announced yesterday.

Cost of each package is $2.50. Standard packages weigh 11 pounds, contain food and cigarettes, and are sent by the Red Cross to prisoners of war.

A limited plan for sending packages has been in operation and the Postoffice has been handling packages for individuals. The Red Cross program is designed to standardize the service under international treaties.

The first consignment of 5,000 standard packages will go on the steamer Cold Harbor from Baltimore about January 25 for Spain and unoccupied France.

District Flu Cases Soar to 147 for Year

The District's flu cases yesterday jumped to 147 for the year but health officials see no cause for alarm.

Fourteen cases were reported yesterday, which was double the previous day report. Officials said that when pneumonia develops "that's the time for worrying."

Martinique Resents Patrol Of Ports by U. S., Captain Says

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 10.—Residents of Martinique, French-owned Caribbean island, are "very resentful" of the presence of two American destroyers outside the harbor of Fort de France, a French passenger steamer master declared today.

Capt. Jacques Fromont, master of the Saint Domingue, which arrived today from the island, said the destroyers had replaced British which previously patrolled the harbor entrance.

Two months ago, it was reported from San Juan, Puerto Rico, that American neutrality patrol warships had taken over the watch on the island from the British West Indies Squadron.

"Why do you have to have destroyers there?" asked Capt. Fromont, a World War veteran who was decorated by Marshal Petain.

"It would be better not to have them there," he continued, "at least not in view of the people."

He added that the two warships were stationed about 6 miles off shore during the day, but, according to islanders' reports, came "right up to the harbor entrance at night."

When newsmen explained that some quarters had expressed concern over the possibility of German control of the island, Capt. Fromont replied, "Ah, the Germans—bah!"

Aboard the Saint Domingue were 35 demobilized French soldiers, most of whom had been residents of the United States when they were called to the colors. Nine other passengers were French civilians and one was an American.

All had reached New York by varied routes from France to North Africa to Martinique.

Passport Case Costs Goering Agent 2 Years

Isidore Lazarus Also Must Pay $2,500 Fine On His Plea of Guilty

By the Associated Press

New York Jan. 10.—A 58-year-old Rumanian Jew, accused by the Government of acting as financial agent for high-ranking Germans in espionage work and propaganda, was sentenced today to two years in prison and fined $2,500 for passport fraud.

He was Isidore Lazarus, who Assistant United States Attorney Richard J. Burke said had transferred large sums of money from Germany for Marshal Goering, Dr. Goebbels, Hjalmar Schacht and other German officials.

The gray-haired defendant pleaded guilty, but insisted that while he was on friendly terms with Reich leaders, it was solely for the purpose of aiding victims of persecution—Jews, Catholics and Protestants alike.

Took Money Out

Burke said that Lazarus, "according to his own story, said that he had been engaged in international exchange under the name Lee Lane, since 1933, when the Nazis came into power in Germany, and was a close friend of German leaders."

The government charged that Lazarus took money out of Germany in behalf of Goering, Schacht and Robert Ley, labor minister, entered New York on a false passport in June, 1939, and later deposited a total of $138,000 in cash and securities in three New York banks.

Burke said the defendant insisted that he had used his connections to help refugees "get a small percentage of their money out of Germany," but, Burke added, "most of their funds remained in Germany and probably wound up in the pockets of German officials."

As Burke completed his charges, Lazarus stood up in court.

Asks to Clear Himself

"Give me the opportunity and I'll bring the big men from Europe to prove that these insinuations, as far as my motives are concerned, are false," he said. "I have given thousands and thousands of dollars to aid refugees of my own race, as well as Catholics and Protestants.

"Send me to jail if you want, but let me clear myself of these aspersions."

The Government said Lazarus first came to this country in 1900 and that since 1923 he had obtained and used seven passports. Official records showed, the court was informed, that Lazarus was convicted twice in this country for operating confidence games.

The indictment said he was born in Rumania in 1882 but that in obtaining a passport through the American consul in Berlin in 1937 he stated he was born in 1887 in Fort Wayne, Ind. Lazarus used this passport when he came to this country in 1939.

Inauguration Donors Lagging

At yesterday's full Inaugural Committee meeting, Capt. R. D. Workman, chief of Navy chaplains and chairman of the committee on religious services, praised the attention which will be given the spiritual significance of the event. Special services will be held in Washington churches next Sunday and the District National Guard will hold its third annual memorial service at Washington Cathedral at 3 p. m. Sunday.

Melvin D. Hildreth, chairman of the grandstand ticket committee, reported that five grandstands were sold out, but that thousands of seats were still available. Mrs. Edwin M. Watson's report for the music committee, presented by C. C. Cappel, showed that all seats, except 11 boxes, for the inaugural gala at Constitution Hall Sunday night were sold out. Features of the gala, Cappel said, would be broadcast.

Army to Parade

The parade, which will show examples of the Army's newest mechanized equipment, will start at 1:45 p. m., Brig. Gen. J. N. Greely, chief of the parade committee staff, said, and will move at 3 miles an hour for the foot units. The mechanized units, he said, would move ahead by bounds at 15 miles an hour.

The air show, weather permitting, will be held at 1:30 p. m., while the President is lunching at the White House, Gen. Greely said. The show will include 280 Army, Navy and Marine Corps planes.

District Commissioner J. Russell Young and Col. David McCoach, jr., Engineer Commissioner, also spoke, together with Inaugural Committee Chairman Joseph E. Davies.

The Inaugural Day program contemplates that President Roosevelt will attend services at St. John's Episcopal Church at 10:30 a. m. Monday and will leave the White House for the Capitol at 11:30. He will take the oath of office at noon, deliver his inaugural address and return to the White House.

While he is lunching, the air show will be held and the parade will start immediately afterward. A White House tea is scheduled for 5 p. m.

'Love Thy Neighbor' Proves Musical Nonsense Of Purest Ray Serene, Opulently Executed; Kinney's Hawaiians a Hit in the Stage Revue

"LOVE THY NEIGHBOR." Paramount picturization of an original screen play by William Morrow, Edmund Beloin, Ernest Pagano and Z. Myers, starring Jack Benny, Mary Martin and Fred Allen, with Verree Teasdale, Eddie Anderson, Virginia Dale, Theresa Harris, Richard Denning, Jack Carson, Barnett Parker, Russell Hicks, Mary Kelley, Chester Clute, the Merry Macs (McMichael Brothers & Helen Carroll) and the Merriell Abbott Dancers. Directed by Mark Sandrich. At the Earle Theater.

THE ESSENTIALS of two of the most popular radio hours on the national networks, with their respective stars playing themselves, have been converted into a screen musical with exceptional skill in "Love Thy Neighbor," major feature of the new week's bill at the Earle Theater.

BELL

The battles of the broadcasts have been translated from terms of the wireless into those of the stage with a sharpening rather than diminution in effect. The stellar male roles are perfectly balanced between Jack Benny and Fred Allen. They have been supplied the materials of war with remarkable efficiency by William Morrow and Edmund Beloin, authors of the Benny circumambient scripts, ably assisted by Ernest Pagano and Z. Myers. Beyond providing precisely what the customers expect, the plot boiled up by the boys does not amount to too much, but it amounts to enough to serve as the framework of one of Paramount's glossiest and most opulent productions, sapiently and swiftly directed by Mark Sandrich.

Mr. Benny, it seems, is organizing a stage show and in the process steals the Merry Macs from Mr. Allen, thus adding incendiary bombs to a conflict that already is hot enough. But Mr. Allen has a niece, just returned from Europe, or somewhere, who thinks she can patch the whole thing up. So she enrolls in Mr. Benny's revue under the name of a dizzy blonde who was a shade too late to answer to her name at chorus call. Then the whole gay business moves itself to Miami, with Mr. Allen in hot pursuit of his rival with a repeating rifle; Eddie "Rochester" Anderson gumming things up handsomely by dividing his allegiance, such as it is, between Mr. Allen and Mr. Benny, and that dizzy blonde bobbing up always at the wrong moment in quest of justice and a job.

This familiar pattern has been rigged up with catchy tunes, a wealth of comedy decoration, some very elegant dancing and an all-around quality of richness that compound an exceedingly nifty entertainment.

Perhaps the main virtue of "Love Thy Neighbor" is that both of its male stars are stage comedians at heart, whose talents are easily and naturally transferred to the silver sheet. Their lines and business are uniformly interesting and amusing and neither has ever worked more effectively in any medium. This is by far Benny's top picture and starts Allen off as a star at an equal altitude. Mary Martin is right up there with them all the way. In addition to a modified version of "My Heart Belongs to Daddy," the song that popped her into overnight fame on Broadway, she introduces "Isn't That Just Like Love"—the number that gets her the job in the Benny show in the show—headed for the front line in the hit parade unless something suddenly happens to the national ear. "Rochester" and Theresa Harris, veterans of earlier Benny pictures, are in there again, aiding enormously in the comedy with the craps games so disastrous to Mr. Anderson and scoring a hit in the first song in the film. Virginia Dale is a peppy and pulchritudinous Virginia Astor and Verree Teasdale a very lorgnette-and-tiara Aunt Barbara. Mary Kelley, of Kate Smithian dimensions, rolls in and out, as a voluminously effervescent chambermaid, and the Merry Macs and Merriell Abbott Dancers also are in and out to high advantage to themselves and the picture.

The bulky batting average of "Love Thy Neighbor" is nicely maintained by Harry Anger's new stage bill. It is dominated by Ray Kinney and his Hawaiian Orchestra, hula dancers and specialists, who would turn the old, original Toots Paka green with envy were she around to hear and see them. The orchestra's lilting melodies, with the conductor doing the vocals, are as seductive as the islands from which they hail and so are Memo Holt, with her rhythmic hands, etceteras, and Leimomi Woodd with her comedy dances. George Kainapau displays not one voice, but two, in "Beautiful Kanana" and "Sweet Lai-Lani," the last named done by the same group in Bing Crosby's "Waikiki Wedding." To lend variety to the goings-on there are the Knight Sisters, in their superlative acrobatic dancing, and Bob Dupont, that extraordinary juggler, who eats an apple out of the air at every performance just to make it tough for four doctors.

The newsreel is devoted entirely to the high points in the President's speech before the Congress and two other supplementaries are added in "Unusual Occupations" and "Elmer's Pet Rabbit," both in Technicolor, to round out a whale of a joyride.

That Feud Seems to Be Getting One of the Boys Down

FRED ALLEN, MARY MARTIN, JACK BENNY, VERREE TEASDALE reading in the usual direction, as they appear in one of Mr. Allen's more jittery moments in Paramount's production of "Love Thy Neighbor," the comedy with music, currently on the screen at the Earle Theater. Eddie "Rochester" Anderson, Virginia Dale and Theresa Harris are foremost in the supporting cast

Fadiman Will Be Emcee at Stars' Banquet

Carolyn Lee Youngest Star Coming to the Birthday Celebrations

Clifton Fadiman, known to radio followers as the lion tamer of "Information Please," and to screen addicts as the quiz star of occasional short subjects, will be master of ceremonies for the Willard banquet to the visiting screen stars, coming for the President's Birthday Ball celebration, on January 30.

"Frankly I don't think I'm your man, but it sounds like a command performance to an old Roosevelt-before-Albany man like myself; so call it a date," he wrote the entertainment committee.

Mr. Fadiman, literary editor of the New Yorker Magazine, has had a sensational rise to popularity via the national network air waves. His program when first projected over the ether in September, 1938, was considered by the radio experts as "too highbrow."

Nevertheless, with John Kieran, sports oracle; Franklin P. Adams, poet and columnist, better known as F. P. A., and Oscar Levant, the waggish composer and tune encyclopedia, "Information Please" caught on with listeners. Today it is second only to Jack Benny in all polls and commercial reports on listener interest.

The Willard banquet, at which all visiting celebrities will appear, is open to the general public, with tickets available from the dinner committee, headed by Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox.

Following the banquet, the stars will rotate with Mrs. Roosevelt at the birthday balls scheduled for the hotels Mayflower, Shoreham, Washington, Hamilton and Wardman Park.

Youngest starlet to come to the President's Birthday Celebrations is tiny Carolyn Lee, who celebrated her fifth birthday on June 5, 1940.

An amazing youngster, with no stage or screen training of any kind, Carolyn so astounded studio officials with her personality and ability in a screen test, she was given a feature-length role with Fred MacMurray and Madeleine Carroll in Paramount's "Honeymoon in Bali," as her first assignment at the age of four.

New York, Jan. 10.

FRANK HAMLIN, of the Social Register, left New York shortly after the declaration of war, and organized an American ambulance unit for service at the front . . . Hamlin performed meritorious services in France. And the husky, 6-ft.-5 American was an easy target. He was wounded and taken to a Paris hospital. He was still there when France fell and the Nazi occupation began . . . But Hamlin still had his passport and credentials. Somehow, someway, he was released, and sent back to America two weeks ago. Tuesday evening he decided to celebrate his return. He went to "Hellzapoppin," banged his head against the backstage door, and is under doctors' care for brain concussion.

AFTER BRUCE CABOT slept in the Abe Lincoln room at the White House, he left the grounds—and was served a writ attaching his salary . . . "Honeymoon Island," which provided free honeymoons for 250 couples last year, now will entertain that many couples every two weeks. Nationally-known companies will cooperate in sending the newlyweds there.

THE DENNIS KING-Lex Thompson musical, "She Had to Say Yes," will close in Philadelphia Saturday night. The other ill-fated musical, "Hy 'a Gentlemen," will revert to the authors unless Bob Ritchie produces it in New York within three months . . . Sinclair Lewis, who leaves for Florida tomorrow, is wearing his Equity card around his neck, "in case something happens, and I go to hell."

MARGARET HAYES, who is "Miss Los Angeles" in the Fashion Futures competition, has lived in Los Angeles for less than two years. Before that she was Dana Dale, the New York model whose name has been linked with Jeffrey Lynn's . . . Harry Hopkins' flight from Lisbon to London was delayed not only because of poor weather, but also to allow him to recuperate from the Clipper trip. Hopkins hates to fly . . . The police gathered at El Morocco last night to check on a story given them by a $1,000-reward claimant, who returned an $11,000 diamond bracelet to an insurance company. The finder insists that she discovered the bracelet hanging from one of the branches of the Christmas trees which decorate the front of the night club.

PATSY FLICK, one of the authors of the Ed Wynn show, has had much experience in Hollywood. That's why, when a film producer patronizingly assured Patsy that he was impressed with his talents and said, "If you ever decide to come to the Coast, give me a ring. Maybe I can use you," Flick nodded understandingly and replied: "Okay—Go jump in the lake" . . . "Now what kind of an answer is that?" demanded the indignant producer . . . "That's so when I finally get to the Coast, and you tell me the same thing," Patsy explained, "at least I'll have the satisfaction of knowing that you're using my material."

AT THE Helen Hayes-Maurice Evans' "Twelfth Night" party onstage, four bottles of Scotch disappeared completely, in full view of the audience . . . Before Vincent Sheean agreed to become an expert for "Information Please" on last week's program, Dan Golenpaul, the program's producer, promised to pay him a double fee, if Sheean's performance wasn't satisfactory. Sheean now is demanding that extra fee, but Golenpaul insists he was allright.

JOHNNY GREEN, the composer-bandleader, and Betty Furness, the screen actress, have been married four years. Because their respective jobs necessitatd thir bnig parted for frequent periods of time, they planned for the day when Betty would have a job in a Broadway play, and Johnny would have a show running in New York. That plan at last was on the verge of realization, when Betty recently was signed to appear in "Off the Record," and Green was signed to write the music for "Hy'a Gentlemen," and agreed to conduct the orchestra . . . But Johnny never had a chance to see his wife perform in her play, and Betty never had a chance to see her husband conduct the orchestra playing his music at his show. Before their scheduled New York premieres, "Off the Record" closed in Philadelphia, and "Hy'a Gentlemen" closed in Boston—the same night.

Louella O. Parsons'

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Jan. 10 (INS).—Teaming blondes is getting to be a habit at Twentieth Century-Fox. First, Betty Grable and Alice Faye battled for "oomph" honors in "Tin Pan Alley" and now Betty's getting Carole Landis as her chief competition in "Miami."

PARSONS

What a cast they're lining up! In addition to Betty and Carole, Bob Cummings gets the male lead—and is that boy going places in 1941! From the looks of things, it's a Cummings year—because all his troubles with Universal are ironed out and almost every studio in town wants to borrow him.

As I told you before, Jack Haley and Charlotte Greenwood are also in the lineup for this musical which should top both "Down Argentine Way" and "Tin Pan Alley." Walter Lang leaves soon to direct Technicolor shots in Miami. Wish I could go along, but why travel so far for the nags and the beaches when we have both right here?

Just between you and me, Warners wish they'd never made any agreements to let Twentieth share even one picture yearly on Ida Lupino's contract. The Lupino girl is booked for almost as many important roles at Warners as is Bette Davis. Hal Wallis today purchased "The Damned Don't Cry," a novel, for her and it is now being scripted. It is by the author of "Shanghai Express," the thriller-diller that starred Marlene Dietrich in the good old days when she was Queen of Paramount.

Lon Chaney sr., always had a warm spot in his heart for Universal because this was the studio that gave him his first chance. Now it looks as if his boy, Lon jr., may follow in his footsteps, for he has been given a long-term contract by U., but he will not be as limited in his roles as was his father. Although Lon jr., did "Man Made Monster," he is a good looking lad and they plan to give him a variety of roles.

Chatter in Hollywood: All the time we have been linking Alice Faye's name with this and that Hollywood Romeo, her interest has been elsewhere. When she was down in Palm Springs weeks ago she met Charles B. Wrightsman, wealthy Texas oil executive, and he started bombarding Alice with orchids, offering her his private plane, and being so nice—sounds like the answer to a maiden's prayer—rich and not bad looking. Wrightman is now in New York and he has been telegraphing Alice every day.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Rudy Vallee is asking to meet Gene Tierney; the ban which the local photographers put on Lana Turner for refusing to cooperate has been lifted and is she glad? Glenn Ford, the newest screen discovery, has discovered Ruth Terry; Eddie Albert has been showing the town to Nan Wynn, singer being tested by Warners; Mae Sunday, who has been very sick with pneumonia in Palm Springs, is recuperating in Hollywood; Peggy MacManus and Andrew McLaglen, Victor's son, a hot duet.

Mrs. John Hubbard goes into the Cedars of Lebanon Hospital tomorrow to await the arrival of the Hubbard baby; Carole Landis has rented Edna Mae Oliver's attractive Brentwood house; Martha Raye is paging Hollywood producers to say that she wants to do a picture; Gracie and George Burns celebrated their fifteenth wedding anniversary Tuesday. They leave for New York January 26 for six weeks in the big town.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Jan. 10.

I wonder, in Hollywood's quest for new faces and its rushing to welcome every stranger in our midst, if sometimes it isn't a disadvantage to be an American. In normal times, there's room and opportunity for all. But in times like these, it's like the shoemaker who makes shoes for everybody else's children and lets his own go barefoot.

HOPPER

I was thinking of all this, when into my office walked Rudolph Bach, whom I met first in 1932 when he was making the foreign versions of Metro's best pictures for the German market. He was born in Vienna, but became a citizen of this country 20 years ago. He made for Metro 22 pictures in 22 months, which meant that he translated their pictures into German, making the dubbed-in speech of German actors match the lip movements of our stars, like Garbo, Marie Dressler, Norma Shearer, Wally Beery.

In fact, Wally Beery was knocked for a loop when he went into the projection room and heard himself speaking perfect German—and he can't understand a word of it.

Bach was standing on the street corner one day when a friend came up to him and said, "You look so worried—all your relatives must be in Germany." "I'm worried," he replied, "because I brought 13 of them over here. They all have good jobs, and I can't get one."

So I began summing up. In 1940 we've had some fine German actors on the screen. We welcomed Albert Basserman in "Dr. Ehrlich's Magic Bullet." He seemed to give a new meaning to the part, because he was the real thing—the German scientist who spoke English poorly. Yet in that same picture, we had one of the finest American actresses, Ruth Gordon, who played Mrs. Ehrlich beautifully. Ruth hasn't been seen on the screen since. But Mr. Basserman gave his same performance in "Foreign Correspondent," "Moon Over Burma," "Knute Rockne," "Dispatch from Reuters," and several others. He also got his wife jobs.

A couple of years ago RKO made a picture for $100,000, which was so good it was up for an Academy Award. It was called "A Man to Remember," and starred Edward Ellis, who is a man to remember. Yet have we done it? Not Hollywood. I've looked through the list, but can't find one picture he was in in 1940.

We have Felix Bressart, who's also very good, but a German refugee who did his first picture with Deanna Durbin. At Metro, where he's under contract, he did "Ninotchka," "Edison, the Man," "Shop Around the Corner," "Mortal Storm," "Bittersweet," and "Comrade X." We've also got S. Z. Sakall, a relative of Joe Pasternak's. He played in "It's a Date," "My Love Came Back," "Spring Parade" (in which he all but stole the picture). We saw Ludwig Stossel who played in "Four Sons," "The Man I Married," and "Jenny." Hear his salary is now in four figures. Sig Arno played in "Little Bit of Heaven" and "Diamond Frontier." And we have many, many more.

The point I'm trying to make is that they're all fine actors, getting top salaries. But we have good American actors, too. How about Charlie Bickford, who did such a swell job in "Of Mice and Men," Louis Calhern, who, unable to get work in Hollywood, went back to play the lead in "Life With Father" in the Boston Company.

Joseph Cawthorne and Stu Erwin, who now get small parts, Vaughn Glazer, who's been a star on the American stage for lo, these many years. Jimmy Gleason is just coming into his own through Frank Capra, Porter Hall, Paul Lukas, who gave an unforgettable performance in "Little Women," Fred Niblo, Moroni Olsen, who's forgotten more about acting than many people will ever know, Charlie Ruggles, Henry Travers, Fred Stone, Otto Kruger. Sure, some of these men have been working, but not in the important roles that make for ecognition and higher pay.

If our American actors don't get jobs, who's going to take care of their families? Certainly not the foreign stars, who send everything they're not using back to their own countries. Nobody can blame them for it. It's human nature to take care of your own first—that's what I'm talking about.

Vichy Plan Rejection Blow To Refugees

Thousands in Camps Suffer; U. S. Refuses Mass Transfer

By Lansing Warren
Copyright by New York Times

Vichy, Jan. 10.—Rejection by the United States State Department of the French proposal for transfer of foreign refugees from France leaves the problem here in a very acute stage.

According to official quarters the United States and the Central and South American republics have permitted certain individual refugees to enter their territory. But in most instances, as is the case with the United States, they are unwilling to allow any mass entries and those governments which are willing, as in the case of Mexico, are unable to supply transportation.

Meantime, thousands of foreign, as well as French and other refugees are passing the winter under conditions of great hardship in the insufficient shelter of hurriedly constructed camps. Fuel is lacking in most of them and transport and provisioning is hindered by one of the severest winter seasons that Europe has experienced in years. There is considerable sickness from exposure.

Among the internees are large numbers of Jews, including more than 20,000 sent from Germany. There are also several thousand international persons interned as dangerous to public safety. The camps for Jews, for French and for foreigners are organized on the same system and all inmates except criminals interned in special centers, receive the same treatment. Special favors are accorded to those Lorrainers who are still in camps.

It is the declared policy to grant exit visas to those persons who can obtain admission to some other country. But before these exit permits can be issued holders must have transportation. This perhaps accounts for the number of persons waiting for permits to leave for the United States who hold American visas. There is also a provision of the armistice which requires German permission before anyone on a list of several thousand refugees in France can leave the country.

Von Reichenau's Widow Dies

Word was received here yesterday of the death in Heidelberg, Germany, of Frau Kate von Reichenau, widow of Franz von Reichenau, onetime German diplomat under the Kaiser.

She was a native-born American and before her marriage was Kate Piper. Her husband served diplomatic missions in Sweden, the Vatican, Bulgaria and Chile.

Frau von Reichenau is survived by two daughters, Hertha von Reichenau and Frau Irma von Wagenhoff.

Baering Down On the News

By Arthur "Bugs" Baer

I guess the main attribute of democracy is the right of two people to get different answers to the same problem in simple arithmetic.

That's the way we operate and usually without an anesthetic.

Well, it was good enough for Lincoln, it was good enough for Madison, it was good enough for Washington. And if it's good enough for those three towns it's good enough for Bridgeport.

Do you realize that we are having an inaugural pretty soon in the middle of all this turmoil? Well, we are still voting while over in Europe they are drawing straws.

I notice that we are to have three Navies to keep up with two Thanksgivings and that fifth down at Cornell.

Hindsight is better than foresight they say. But it doesn't prevent a motorcycle cop from catching you on the first hill. Every writer I know tried to stop the scuttling of our fleet at the London conference almost 20 years ago. But they were ignored like no smoking signs in Esperanto.

Well, we are getting another chance. Soon we will have three fleets, plenty of airplanes and all kinds of munitions. And if there is another peace conference don't send an old-bottles-and-rags man to the meeting.

The Gallup Poll

Survey Indicates 2-to-1 Sentiment In Favor of Statehood for Hawaii

By Dr. George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Jan. 10.—Will Hawaii become the forty-ninth State?

Without much attention being given the news in continental United States, the voters of Hawain on November 5 decided by a plebiscite vote of 2 to 1 to ask for Statehood.

From now on Hawaiian citizens interested in Statehood will place their case before Congress in bills and resolutions.

While the question of Statehood for Hawaii has not been widely discussed outside of the islands themselves, a survey just completed by the American Institute of Public Opinion provides interesting evidence that—at the present time—a majority of voters with opinions on the question think Hawaii should be admitted to the Union.

Not since 1912, when Arizona and New Mexico were admitted, has a new star been added to the American flag.

The Institute's question, put to men and women in a cross-section of the electorate in every State, was as follows:

"Would you favor admitting Hawaii into the Union as a State?"

The replies were:

YES	48%
NO	23
UNDECIDED OR NO OPINION	29

It is interesting to note that—among those with definite opinions—Statehood was approved by slightly more than 2 to 1, or almost the same majority found in the island's plebiscite last November.

The Mid-Pacific Key

Hawaii has of course become the mid-Pacific key to United States defenses. It is the site of a large Army camp and one of the principal stations of the United States fleet. Through fleet manuevers, travel, reading and films the American people have become more conscious of their island outpost than they have been in recent years.

The common attitude of those who favor Statehood is that the Territory is "already practically a State, and the people should have the right to a larger voice in their own Government."

Taking the opposite position are those who fear that "it might fall under Japanese control because of the birthrate of Japanese in the islands" or for other causes, and also some who think the islands "too far away" to belong to the Federal system.

Sociological "Myth"

The question of possible future dominance of Hawaii by the Japanese, via the birthrate, was well aired in the islands' plebiscite last November.

The Honolulu Star-Bulletin traced the notion of "Japanese dominance" to a sociological "myth" of 20 years ago that Japanese in Hawaii would continue to increase in geometric proportion to the other islanders, reaching "47 per cent" of the Hawaiian electorate by 1940.

Far from increasing at this rate, however, the Japanese birthrate in the islands has steadily fallen even since 1918, and is today "less than that for Hawaiians, part-Hawaiians and other racial groups," the Star-Bulletin said.

Harry S. Wolf, D. C. Merchant, Dies at Home

Harry S. Wolf, 66, prominent Washington businessman, died yesterday at his home in the Beverly Court Apartments, 1736 Columbia Road Northwest.

A lifelong resident of the Capital, Mr. Wolf had engaged in several business enterprises. In recent years he was proprietor of a shoe store at 929 F Street Northwest. He also was a director of the Columbia National Bank.

He was born here in 1875, and attended Washington public schools. As a boy he was employed as a stock clerk in Lansburgh's Department Store, and worked his way through a series of promotions until he became merchandise manager.

He was past master of St. John's Lodge of the Masons. He also was one of the charter members of the Woodmont Country Club.

Mr. Wolf leaves his wife, Mrs. Bertha Wolf; a daughter, Mrs. Wilma Lowenthal, of Baltimore, and a grandson.

Funeral services will be at 10 a. m. today at the home. Interment will be in the Washington Hebrew Cemetery.

3,300 Workers 'Weeded Out' At Fort Meade

Force of 16,600 Remains to Complete Camps by Feb. 3

Approximately 3,300 workmen have been dismissed from construction projects at Fort George G. Meade, Md., officers declared yesterday.

Maj. J. A. Noxon, construction quartermaster at the fort, nevertheless asserted the working force, now reduced to 16,600, is sufficient to complete cantonments for the Twenty-ninth Division by February 3.

Noxon said the men dismissed were "either too lazy to produce or were physically and mentally incapable of producing." He emphasized that it was extremely difficult to obtain skilled workmen in sufficient numbers for the project.

The firing of the 3,300 represented a "weeding-out" process of men whom the construction company, Consolidated Engineering Co. had been forced to hire because of the lack of skilled workers, it was reported.

While skilled workers are needed at Meade, the construction force would remain between 6,000 and 7,000 Noxon asserted.

Legion Chief Addresses Sojourners Tonight

Milo J. Warner, national commander of the American Legion, is en route to Washington from Fort Worth, Tex., to be guest speaker tonight at the annual banquet of National Sojourners at the Mayflower Hotel, it was announced last night.

The banquet will follow an all-day meeting of the group's national officers. The order is composed of commisioned officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey and reserve units. New officers of the local chapter will be installed.

Rich Derides Scott Circle UnderpassPlan

Choice of 16th Street For Line of Tunnel Is Called 'Ridiculous'

The choice of Sixteenth Street instead of Massachusetts Avenue for the line of Scott Circle underpass was denounced as "utterly ridiculous" by Representative Rich (Republican), of Pennsylvania, yesterday on the House floor.

Rich urged that the project be stopped "before it's too late" and changed.

"I may be from the country," he told newspapermen later, "but whoever decided to switch the subway to Sixteenth Street is just too damn dumb. Why anybody can see that it ought to continue in line with the Thomas Circle underpass."

Rich placed in the Congressional Record copies of correspondence with the Commissioners and Chairman Randolph, of the House District Committee, regarding the controversy.

He declared that Scott Circle now constitutes such a "bottleneck" for traffic on Massachusetts Avenue that automobiles are dammed up into the Thomas Circle subway in the late afternoon.

Representative Bolles (Republican), of Wisconsin, subsequently said he had received many letters protesting against the subway plan.

"I did my best to stop it last year," he recalled.

Bolles had the authorization for the project eliminated from the 1941 District appropriations bill on a point of order, but it was restored in the Senate.

SEC Rejects Proposal of Columbia Gas

Changes Were Offered As Complying With 'Death Sentence' Act

The Securities Commission last night rejected a request by Columbia Gas & Electric Corporation for a declaration that through proposed changes the company would comply with both the integration and corporate simplification requirements of the so-called "death sentence" of the Holding Company Act.

The commission's action was a final step in a proceeding begun about two years ago. It issued a tentative finding last July approving parts of the plan but withholding an overall finding.

Columbia Gas has a book value investment of about $367,000,000 in subsidiaries which compose a system aggregating more than $700,000,000 in assets. Columbia Gas itself has about 70,000 security holders and operates gas utilities in 1,195 communities and electric utilities in 414 communities. These are in Ohio, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Kentucky, New York, Maryland, Virginia and Indiana.

The steps proposed by Columbia Gas called for the dissolution of six inactive subsidiaries, the transfer to itself of three wholly-owned subsidiaries of Atlantic Seaboard Corporation, the transfer of the assets of Eastern Pipe Line Co. to Home Gas Co., both subsidiaries, and dissolution of Eastern Pipe Line and the transfer by United Fuel Gas Co. of Big Marsh Oil Co., a nonutilities subsidiary.

The commission declared that its final decision rested solely on the fact that the system as presented included both electric utilities and gas utilities.

It held also that under the proposals C. G. & E.'s "voting power is inequitably distributed in at least three companies—C. G. E. itself, Dayton Power & Light Co. and the Cincinnati Gas & Electric Co."

cluding New York, have reported expenditures of over $3,500,000; independent Republican committees, $3,250,000; Republican State committees, over $5,000,000; Democratic State committees, over $2,000,000, and independent Democratic committees, $314,000, Senator Gillette said.

Doesn't Relish Inquiry

Meanwhile, Senator Hill (Democrat) of Alabama, declared that in view of the questioning of Reynolds, he wanted to call before the committee representatives of the Rockefeller, du Pont and Pew families, all large contributors to the G. O. P.

Senator Hill said that the Pews had given $91,025 in the last campaign to the Republicans; the du Ponts, $68,550, and the Rockefellers, $30,500.

Chairman Gillette, a Democrat, said the committee would decide today whether to prolong its hearings, but he displayed little relish for the idea.

After hearing Reynolds give testimony that directly conflicted with that presented the previous day by Oliver A. Quayle, jr., former treasurer and now general manager of the Democratic National Committee, Senator Tobey exclaimed that "somebody is guilty of perjury."

"Somebody lied," shouted the exasperated New Englander. "It's a disgraceful thing." Quayle will be called back before the committee today.

On Thursday Quayle had told the committee that he personally had asked Reynolds over the telephone for loans of $175,000 for the New York State Democratic committee and $100,000 for the New Jersey committee. Quayle said he had explained to Reynolds that the national committee was rapidly approaching its $3,000,000 limitation.

But yesterday Reynolds testified that the arrangement had been made with Wayne Johnson, financial director of the national committee, and not with Quayle. He added that no mention was made of the $3,000,000 limit or of how the money was to be expended.

Reynolds, 34-year-old heir to a gigantic tobacco fortune, said that before coming to the Senate hearing, he had discussed the matter with Quayle; had told him he thought Quayle was "confused," and added that Quayle replied "he guessed he was."

"That's a good man to be general manager of the Democratic National Committee," snorted Senator Tobey, "a man who can make a statement under oath one day and say the next day he guesses he was wrong."

Reynolds revealed to the committee in his slow drawl that in addition to the $275,000 he had lent the New York and New Jersey State committees, he had also lent $25,000 to the Illinois Democratic central committee.

Something of a Bombshell

This was something of a bombshell, as Senator Gillette stated that the Illinois committee had officially reported no receipts and no disbursements. Adding that the Democratic National Committee had reported it had given $25,000 to the Illinois group, Senator Gillette observed that further explanations would be demanded from Illinois.

Repeatedly in response to Senator Tobey's questions, Reynolds denied that he viewed the $300,000 in loans as "contributions"—even after a section of the Hatch Act had been read to him including loans under the definition of contributions. The act, however, apparently exempts State committees.

Expects To Be Repaid

"I expect the loans to be repaid," Reynolds declared as he showed the committee the actual promissory notes. He said he had made the National Committee an outright gift of $5,000—the maximum permitted by law.

Reynolds explained that he made the loans "because I got a little worried about the Gallup poll."

In answer to Senator Tobey's queries Reynolds said he owned 51 per cent of the stock in the American Mail Line, which, he said, receives the "usual" subsidy from the Government. Other major interests he listed as the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., Monsanto Chemical Co. and Eastern Air Lines.

Orderly City Planning

The fact that Washington has outgrown the area set aside for the National Capital must be apparent even to casual visitors. Thousands of Government workers coming into the city every day live in Virginia and Maryland. Many of the monuments, memorials and drives inseparably associated in the mind of the public with the Capital City are outside its legal boundaries. Recently the Government has begun to erect office buildings in Arlington County and the new National Airport lies partly in Virginia. Certainly, then, Chairman Delano of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission has not been overhasty in suggesting that some sort of metropolitan administration be created to coordinate the growth of the city regardless of legal boundaries.

A few weeks ago The Post directed attention to the lamentable mistake of Congress in retroceding Arlington County to Virginia nearly 100 years ago. In his recent address Mr. Delano expressed the hope that "our wayward sister across the Potomac might some day be brought back into the fold." At present there seems to be little prospect that Arlington could be induced again to surrender its political rights and become a part of the voteless District. Washington will have to acquire a government of its own and be recognized as part of the American political system before talk of extending its boundaries will be feasible.

In the meantime, there is a real need for closer cooperation between the various communities which constitute the metropolitan area. These communities have many common problems, such as the development of parks, water supply and sanitary systems. In the interests of both economy and efficiency these undertakings ought to be coordinated. The experience of many other American cities has proved the necessity of centralized municipal planning if anything approaching orderly growth is to be attained.

Some degree of cooperation between the District and its suburbs is now in effect. Mr. Delano has rendered a real public service, however, in pointing out that it falls far short of the needs of this rapidly growing metropolitan area. The Park and Planning Commission may well follow up its chairman's suggestion by asking Congress to authorize a study of the whole problem, with Maryland and Virginia participating.

Parity On The Farm

Although Congress added $212,000,000 to the 1940 agricultural supply bill to cover parity payments to farmers for the current fiscal year, President Roosevelt did not provide for such payments in the budget which he presented to Congress a year ago. Indeed, he indicated that if such payments were later approved, special taxes ought to be voted to cover the additional unbudgeted costs. This year, with reductions in nondefense outlays made all the more imperative by the extraordinary outlays for defense, the President has requested an appropriation of $49,866,000 for parity payments, and is seeking authorization to make additional payments up to $162,000,000. These two figures together would bring total parity payment expenditures to approximately $212,000,000—the amount appropriated for the present fiscal year.

The classification of a large proportion of the projected parity payments as "contract authorizations" subject to the President's approval and payable in the fiscal year 1943 on 1942 crops is highly confusing, to say the least. Whatever the purpose of this budget legerdemain may be, the effect is to produce an apparent reduction in the total appropriations for the Department of Agriculture. A slight increase would have been shown if all parity payments had been entered as a direct appropriation.

The cost of parity payments may seem negligible by contrast with the huge sums voted for other purposes. But the inclusion of such items in the budget is significant evidence that the Administration is not yet ready to retrench at points where economies could and should be effected. As The Post pointed out recently, farmers are on the whole receiving better prices for their products currently than they were a year ago, despite the dislocations of war. If parity payments were not considered essential by the President last January, it is hard to understand why they should be regarded as indispensable now.

It is impossible to understand why the "principle of parity" must be maintained, as the President insists, when restoration of the vanished price relationships of the years before the first World War has been shown to be both unattainable and undesirable. And why must parity payments be added to the proposed half billion dollars of soil conservation subsidies plus hundreds of millions of dollars of other subsidies intended to bolster farm prices and otherwise aid the farm population?

Lend-Lease

At Thermopylae, Western civilization was saved from barbarian invasion by stronger armor as well as by a burning loyalty to Greek institutions. But the modern Greeks are so ill supplied with armor that they have been reduced to dropping stones on the Italians. And the British, who stand guard at our twentieth century Thermopylae, are short of many of the weapons needed for victory. The new lend-lease bill is destined to make up this deficiency.

For most of the provisions of the bill the public had been prepared by the President's speeches and by subsequent statements from those who will have the responsibility for piloting the measure through Congress. The bill is a blank check to Mr. Roosevelt to make and transfer defense materials to "any country whose defense the President deems vital to the defense of the United States." In all the circumstances there may not be any other method of making aid to Britain swift and effective. Take, for example, the new system of compensation for our supplies. We can't tell ahead of time the kind of terms and conditions of repayment which would best serve our national interest. A similar difficulty is present in regard to the kinds of our supplies to Britain and the speed with which we shall make those supplies available. Assuredly, the grant of power in this respect is staggering whether the measure is viewed on its face or its implications. It would have been more reassuring if the responsibility for dovetailing our aid to Britain and our continental defense were vested in a service board of strategy headed by the President, more or less on the same pattern as Britain's committee of imperial defense. In the absence of such a board, Congress might be well advised to insist upon an explanation in detail by our Army and Navy officials of the relation between our new policy and our security.

There is bound to be discussion on two aspects of the lend-lease measure. One is the provision allowing the President to let the British in on any of our secret designs. The other would allow the British to use our dockyards for the repair and outfitting of their naval vessels. Aside from the fact that both concessions live up to the spirit of the stake we have assumed in a Nazi defeat, neither is a one-sided concession. Patently the British, out of their intensive research and combat experience, have accumulated their share of gadgets which they will be only too happy to put at our disposal. Indeed, they wish to see them incorporated in the planes they are ordering in America. At any time, moreover, we can have the same facilities at Singapore and other British bases which are proposed to be put at Britain's disposal in our country.

A policy of all-out aid to Britain has been laid down with the approval of the vast majority of our people. It remains for Congress to authorize its implementation. Too much time already is behind us. As far back as August 4, Gen. John J. Pershing warned us that in the following few months we were entering upon critical history. "If there is anything we can do to save the British fleet during that time," he said, "we shall be failing in our duty to America if we do not do it." The country agreed then, and it agrees even more today. That we are not faced with a Hitlerite Europe today, one looking for new worlds to conquer, is due to the men and women of Britain and Greece who, in spite of their thin armor, are still gallantly holding the pass.

Buying The Bonds

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the fiscal year 1940 contains in statistical form the anti-inflationary argument for trying to sell the deficit to private investors rather than to the banks.

In the past eight years $28,700,000,000 was added to the public debt, including obligations guaranteed by the Government. Of the total, 46 per cent was taken by commercial and savings banks, 18 per cent by insurance companies, and 23 per cent by Federal agencies and trust funds. Individuals and corporations (other than banks and insurance companies) absorbed only $3,200,000,000 of these new issues, or about 11 per cent of the newly created debt—chiefly in the form of United States savings bonds and adjusted service certificates. Furthermore, the report notes that the concentration of Government securities in the hands of institutional investors has been amazingly accelerated in recent years. Banks and insurance companies, for example, held about 45 per cent of the privately held marketable supply of Government securities in June, 1932, whereas today they hold 72 per cent of such issues.

Such excessive dependence upon financial institutions to supply funds needed by the Government is bad for the Government and bad for the lenders, too. For the banking system it means a dangerously large proportion of assets invested in fixed-interest obligations which may decline in value and which in any case could not be sold in large amounts without seriously depressing values. For the Government it means reliance upon a form of deficit financing that is potentially inflationary. This is because Government bonds sold to banks are paid for by the creation of new deposits for Government account on the books of those banks, and these new deposits are equivalent to new purchasing power. When Government bonds are sold to individuals, however, there is no inflationary increase in purchasing power, but merely a shift of purchasing power from persons buying the bonds to the Government. This kind of deficit finincing is not only noninflationary, but it diverts consumer income that might be used to buy nonessential articles to purchases of weapons, planes, ships, etc., needed for defense purposes.

Thus the familiar arguments in favor of a wider distribution of Government issues which have been urged ever since the Government debt began to skyrocket have been strengthened by the emergence of the defense program which, whatever Mr. Jesse Jones may say, contains at least the seeds of inflation.

Aid To The Finns

The statement of the British blockade authorities on Finland is marked by more than a little diplomatic ineptitude. It will be news to many Americans that in the past three months the British have approved a million dollars worth of navicerts for clothing and foodstuffs. Britain long ago could have got credit in American eyes for this leniency. Now, however, she invites criticism. For the statement as issued by the British Embassy leaves the question unclear whether more shipments will be allowed or all shipments will be cut off. "The British government," runs the statement, "will allow passage through the blockade of such supplies as may be necessary to meet Finland's requirements provided that Finland refrains from any further unneutral act." The unneutral act referred to is the permission granted to Germany for German soldiers to pass through Finland to and from Norway. From Sweden as well as from Finland the Germans had exacted this privilege.

Without doubt the concession is, technically, unneutral, but equally without doubt, was extorted out of Finland under duress. Yet it is questionable whether the Germans are allowed to take to Germany any of the trickle of imports coming through Finland's arctic porthole, Petsamo. Certainly the record of Finland entitles that country to more consideration than Spain, and in the circumstances should have been sufficient to dissuade the British from tacking a public threat onto their statement.

Side Line For The V. P.

Henry A. Wallace has hit upon a particularly happy answer to the question of how a Vice President may make himself useful when Congress is not in session. And it is not improbable that his plan may save him from the eclipse which has so frequently dimmed the luster of our Vice Presidents after they have taken office.

Like his predecessor, Mr. Wallace will be found heading south whenever it is feasible for him to desert the Senate dais for any length of time. But, unlike "Cactus Jack," he will not be seeking the quiet leisure of a fishing stream. The former Secretary of Agriculture intends to function as a good-will ambassador to the Latin-American republics, and, if he must follow in the tradition of his predecessor, it will be as a fisher of nations.

The Vice President-elect has already demonstrated his aptitude for this role. Even before he went to Mexico City, he had won the confidence of many Latin Americans by his interest in their agricultural problems, not to say his ability to speak Spanish. His temperament makes him an ideal ambassador of good will, and there can be little doubt that he will find this undertaking a delightful side line after presiding over the Senate.

Nor is it impossible that Mr. Wallace may establish a new and useful precedent in American government. Vice Presidents are customarily in need of a better outlet for their energies, and the country is urgently in need of closer ties with our sister republics to the south. If Mr. Wallace is successful in his missions, a lasting association between the Vice Presidency and our Latin-American relations may well be established.

CITY BIRDS

We shall not hear it long,
This lull of early song,
This eloquence of birds,
Purling the quiet words
Of morning while the light
Is gathering in the bowl of night.

A moment we shall hear
Before the daily veer
Of noises to the street.
So crystalline, so sweet,
It hangs a moment there
And goes as goes the starry air.

The city cannot hold
The evanescent gold
Of those soft throats.
Only the heart still floats
Upon the sound and sees,
Higher than walls, the lift of trees.

Questions War Aims

The editorial, "Let's Go," in The Post of January 7 has impelled me to write. "The President in yesterday's address," says the editorial, "put ardor into our struggle, he justified our sacrifice, by enouncing war aims committing us to the re-establishment of the 'four essential human freedoms.'"

Enouncing war aims is a strange development in our domestic affairs considering the fact that President Roosevelt was elected precisely for enunciating peace principles and because people believed he was the best exponent of democratic principles.

And what has happened now? Defense has become the paramount issue. In our frenzied clamoring for defense—labor for defense, men for defense, women for defense, squelching opposition to war for defense—we are running roughshod over all these principles: principles of free speech, freedom to express a minority point of view, freedom to express our opposition to the Government which has always been held as the democratic way.

Let us not use Hitler methods in our fight against Hitler. We want to annihilate Hitler and all that he stands for, but our struggle is futile if at the same time we are denied our civil liberties, our human rights, if the cause of labor is labeled with all sorts of wild epithets. This spells the beginnings of Hitlerism right here in our "democratic" United States.

And these slackers whom the President talks of, might they not be ordinary human beings who treasure their constitutional rights above all things, who want peace at all costs and are not Fifth Columnists, appeasers, traitors to the country?

Yes, we are behind the President when he talks of preserving our four essential freedoms, when he talks of extending social security and giving jobs to all. We don't want war and all this frenzied preparation because we know this spells the end of our civil liberties, of human rights, of all the rights labor has struggled for these past years. EDDIE HERNAN.

Not A Pardon

The Post of January 4 contained a report by the Associated Press from Lynn, Mass., with a headline reading "Girl Pardoned By Roosevelt Is Held Again." The story reported that a 26-year old girl who had been "pardoned" by President Roosevelt last month had been brought to Lynn, Mass., on an indictment charging her with the theft of jewelry and a fur coat.

I fear that some of your readers may have gained the false impression that the President had granted a "pardon" to an offender who, by committing an additional offense, proved unworthy of the pardon. Such was not the case.

The girl in question was charged with committing three separate thefts during 1937, one in Denver, one in the District of Columbia, and one in Lynn, Mass., Convicted of the Denver theft, she served the severe sentence of 32 months. Following that she was convicted in the District of Columbia. After she had served about 6 months in the District, all of the authorities concerned strongly recommended that her sentence be commuted to the time already served. The case was presented to the President, who commuted the sentence—an act of executive clemency quite different from a full pardon. This was done with the full knowledge that the girl still had to face trial in Lynn, Mass., on the 1937 charge.

I point these things out because I want to make clear that this was not a case of an unjustified pardon.

Keeping Our Heads

May I express my thanks for your courageous editorial in The Post of January 9, "Where Is The Sacrifices?" If the President is the man we hope he is, even he will appreciate its wisdom and frankness. Granted that we face an emergency, it is still true that the fire engine that gets wrecked on the way to the fire can't do much fire fighting. It is heartening to know that one having a place of large influence such as yours also has a level head. There is plenty of opportunity now to prove ourselves men according to Kipling's formula—by keeping our heads when those about us are losing theirs and blaming it on us.

War Or Earthquake?

This war seems to me to be unique in history. It is a war without a battlefield. Hitler has called it a "total war," but it is anything but total. The armies, which traditionally stand before the things and people they wish to defend, stand idle. Behind the lines disasters comparable to natural catastrophes occur almost nightly.

Nobody wins an earthquake. Still, if one nation feels that it can deliver earthquakes as well as receive them, there may remain hope of ultimate "victory." To Americans, however, the question must arise: What will this victory be worth? Miss Dorothy Thompson et al. would reply that certain spiritual values will survive or perish, depending upon British victory or defeat. Miss Thompson forgets that these spiritual values, tortured and twisted in the flames of Coventry and London, may emerge small shadows of their earlier selves.

There is a delicate interrelationship between the spiritual and material forces. Neither can live at all without the other, and a certain balance must be kept for both to remain healthy. This balance was lost in Europe long ago. To restore it will take measures not dreamed of in the Thompson philosophy. Perhaps we need another Will Rogers, a friendly fellow capable of extending a hand to both sides, and capable of saying: "You fellers better shake and make up. You ain't gettin' nowhere with this night bombing."

But we have worked ourselves into such a lather of hate against Germany that even the kindly Will could not unlather us. In lieu of compassion for the general misery in Europe, we shall have to await the verdict of history, which, in the words of Gibbon, is "little more than the register of the crimes, follies and misfortunes of mankind."

Forgotten Episode

In yesterday's courageous and masterly address to Congress the President said: "Except in the Maximilian interlude in Mexico, no foreign power sought to establish itself in this hemisphere." That statement is not accurate. In 1861 Spain reestablished her rule over Santo Domingo and retained it more than four years. That episode seems to have been widely forgotten, as it was by President Wilson in 1919 when he assured a group of Senators that for a European power to reestablish its rule over a former American dependency was "unthinkable." Bundles For Britain

Now is the time to show that we will voluntarily sacrifice our personal desires and pleasures for the greatest cause in the world today. Let us abandon all plans for the inaugural celebration and turn over to Bundles for Britain every cent thus saved, and devote to the work of defense, now lagging, every precious minute of our officials' time.

The invitations have already been printed and sent out? All the better! Let them be made use of in a way similar to what was done with Christmas cards. Let each recipient of an invitation send it to some friend as a souvenir, with a note saying that $25, or $10, or $5, or 25 cents (just whatever the recipient thinks it is worth) has been donated to Bundles for Britain in that friend's name.

Let all who planned to attend the festivities forward to Bundles for Britain the amount they estimate that indulgence would cost them.

Remember our stirring watch words: "Everything in American national life must now be subordinated to the necessity of defense." Remember also that Britain is our defense, and money spent on trivialities may mean the difference between defeat and victory.

What a dramatic demonstration of democracy doing its daily bit it would be to have the message flashed to all corners of the earth: All plans for inaugural festivities abandoned. Americans think winning the war more important than going to a show.

Peace And Naziism

It is pretty hard to understand the logic that would classify those who desire peace as, "pro-Nazi." If the Nazis are for peace, then I must have a distorted conception of what peace means. In other words, how can a person be for and against a thing a one and the same time.

My logic leads me to believe that those who stand for peace, are unqualifiedly against Naziism.

Back In 1936

Lest we forget the contents of a previous address by President Roosevelt, delivered August 15, 1936, I quote the following from it?

"If war should break out again in another continent, let us not blink the fact that we should find thousands of Americans who would be tempted for the sake of fool's gold to break down or evade our neutrality. They would tell you, and unfortunately their views would get wide publicity, that if they could produce and ship this and that and the other article to belligerent nations, the unemployed of America would all find work. They would tell you that if they could extend credit to warring nations, that credit would be used in the United States to build homes and factories and pay our debts. They would tell you that America once more would capture the trade of the world.

"It would be hard to resist this clamor; it would be hard for many Americans, I fear, to look beyond to realize the inevitable penalties, the inevitable day of reckoning that comes from false prosperity. To resist the clamor of that greed if war should come, would require the unswerving support of all Americans who love peace. If we face the choice of profits or peace, the Nation will answer 'we choose peace.' It is the duty of all of us to encourage such a body of public opinion in this country that the answer will be clear and for all practical purposes unanimous."

The Post Impressionist

I Remember . . .

ONE AFTERNOON not long ago it became quite inevitable that I would have to take that long trip. I hadn't been thinking about home for a long time, but now it was becoming a gnawing sensation around my heart. The folks back there would probably be overjoyed; and in the long run it might do me some good to get away from the hustling, rushing city.

I could remember my house, the one I was born in. It lay just on the edge of a wide dirt road, and across the way was the town cemetery. That would always pull some memory down into the front of my eyes, and hinge itself to my thoughts. Just think, buried there was my great-great-grandfather, and grandmother, and on the way down, until today the stones were dirty and mossy, but still framed with the quietness of what is a deep sleep. Of course, I didn't expect to find everything as it used to be. Without a doubt civilization had crept into the chipped and haggard surroundings. It always seemed bleak to me; perhaps it was the cemetery, or the way the mornings would push over the distant hills, as though thrown out of a deep pit, chattering with wind, tousled with smoke, and sometimes buttoned with snow. The winters were raw. I could remember the large black quilt my mother allowed me to use. Lying under its warming closeness, hearing the razor-like sting of wind against the window, the hard-hearted pelting of sleet, the drunken sway of bare trees; and I just smiling to myself, in the warmth of a blanket. It was an eerie room though, the stars glimmered through the windows with words on their points, I used to have one favorite star, to whom I would talk, and some uncanny delicate spirit that probably rose out of the cemetery, would answer me.

You know how much young people like to dream of the future, well, I would tell the stars what I would like to do. They in turn would tip over the window sill and nod. At times it seemed as though I could almost touch them. But I never did try. I knew the board floors were icy; and the wintry gusts would creep through the cracks in the wall and it would make me shudder to even think of walking across the floor. Most of all I would like to hear the rain. Against the pane in the darkness, it would look like beaded light being thrown out of the deep dark sky. Thumping, and rattling, tingling and scratching almost like a code from some Pluvius-minded cloud. The leafless trees always made a weird sight at those times. Bending, curling, tangling, and then the whine of some far-off homeless dog, would add to the splash of water, the rustle of grass, the awfulness of silence.

Sleep would finally come and it would be with longing for the hot breakfast that I would go off into dreams, the which, I could never remember after awakening. Luckily, my mother knew how much I detested hitting the cold floor in the morning and before the dawn started its colorful tour, she would close the windows, and make the room warm with an old coal stove that she would carry upstairs, just for that purpose.

I could now see how grand my mother had been. The table was always immaculate with a clean cloth; the food was never late. There was no waiting. It was there before you. No preliminaries, just dig in and eat. There was always plenty, but plain. Nothing fancy, nothing that was out of the ordinary. It was always a bowl of oatmeal, or some wheat food. The eggs, and the ham, the strawberry jam. You might think we were rich having this type of food. No, no, it was just that we lived that way. Father wouldn't have it any other way. He loved food, and he used to say that is what he lived for. He would rather eat. That is just the way I think about it now.

Dad is gone now, and mother stays in the house with my only sister. They carry on in the same old fashion, day in and day out. That is why I'll be glad to get home. It will be breaking away from the old routine.

I'm almost there now. I can see that the old dirt road is paved now. One cannot see the cemetery, for it is walled off. The house, the old warm house, looks as though it were shipped up on a catalogue request. My mother and sister are standing at the gate waving to me as I walk along. I didn't take my car in, for I wanted to forget the speed, and newness of the city. But I was disappointed.

I slept in that same room. But there are no sounds, the winds of yesterday have been thrown back into the clouds. I look for that same star. Yes, it's still there but it won't come to the window. The old black quilt isn't being used either. Now I sleep under new blue blankets. It is very easy to get out of bed without shivering. Oh, well, it's home, but not the same sweet place. I guess the morning breakfast will start with a juice, and end with coffee and a cigarette. At least there is the memory. No one can take that away from me. That is the change I found. Now I'm back in the city. I have no longing for home. Yes, I'll miss my mother and sister; but more than that I'll miss the house I was raised in.

Voices In Protest

Our country faces, many agree, grave dangers from without. But from within we face greater danger—that from politicians drunk with power, greedy for more and more power; a threatened dictatorship.

An alleged superman announces that he will, while maintaining neutrality and while practically unarmed for the task, set out to reform and regulate the world. He forgets that most of his undertakings in a domestic field have been inglorious flops.

Of what does the diet of this modern western Caesar consist? Are there some new vitamins not yet released to the public?

Halifax's Character

By Harold J. Laski

Strength From Unseen Sources

London.

THE APPOINTMENT of Lord Halifax to succeed Lord Lothian in Washington is a mark of the importance that the Prime Minister and, indeed, all politically minded people in this country attach to Anglo-American relations; for nothing but the supreme importance of Washington could have induced Mr. Churchill to part with a colleague with whom his relations have been so close and upon whose counsel he has so much depended.

Lord Lothian and his successor are a contrast of high interest. Mr. Gladstone once said, after a lifetime's experience of them, that he found politicians a mysterious section of the human race; I think Lord Halifax bears out that admirable aphorism. Words do not easily convey his character. There is something of the genuine saint about his sense of communication with and relation to unseen forces out of which his strength emerges; it is this quality that made so vivid an appeal to Mr. Gandhi. He in many ways is a remote person who rarely gives himself intimately to others. He has nothing of Lord Lothian's ease of relationships; he seems always to keep something like a rampart about his innermost life which few are allowed to penetrate.

HE HAS GREAT courtesy and a deep sense of fair play within the rules he recognizes; he is moved to anger slowly, but burns with inward fires. He is not a man of wide contacts, either personal or intellectual. He has deep loyalties both to doctrines and persons; and would sacrifice himself for them without a moment's qualm. His power to lead is not born of the will or even the capacity to impose himself; he has nothing, for instance, of Mr. Churchill's own unresting ambition to shape a mold into which his generation can be poured. He has, indeed, the rather lazy disposition and temper of a country squire who sees the days pass without any sense of compulsion to fill them; I suspect that while he was at the foreign office he drove himself to its grim labors rather than, like Palmiston or Canning, performing them out of the sheer desire to be the master of material.

Lord Halifax is a Conservative in Burke's sense: "The disposition to preserve and the ability to improve, taken together, are his standard of the statesman." He believes deeply in the rights of prescription, but has no inherent opposition to any change the necessity of which he can be convinced. There is really a liberal strain in him, but it is the outcome not of intellectual perception but of the aristocrat's dislike of the ugly and the brutal. He is hesitant, in general, about large-scale experiment; but he has, again, the aristocratic willingness to do a big thing in a big way if he agrees that it should be done. Most of his weaknesses, above all his blind spots, derive from the narrowness of his contacts. He knows little or nothing of the working class, save as a great landlord; and he knows little or nothing of the middle class, save in the remote way that a tory aristocrat has, a little aloofly, to come to terms with them in his party.

HOW WILL he get on in Washington? I can imagine that, within a brief time of his arrival, there will be certain men with whom he will quickly form understandings. First and foremost, the President himself. They share in common the insistence upon an ethical approach to politics, and the insistence, too, on the importance of ways of behavior. There are certain things a "gentleman" does not do whether in London or Berlin, Washington or Moscow. They share, too, the belief in the ultimately religious foundations of the universe and the conviction that we, again to quote Burke, are "marshaled by a divine tactic." He will, I think, almost at once see the significance of Senator Norris; that noble old crusader's standards will strike an immediate response in Lord Halifax. Mr. Ickes will impress him, though he will wonder a little at the emphasis and clarity of Mr. Ickes' utterances. I can conceive of a profound friendship between him and types so different as Attorney General Jackson and Senator La Follette. For the men in Britain who have always impressed him are those who have that sense of things beyond themselves for which they are more deeply concerned than they are for their own concerns. I think he will appreciate the subtle, gentle melancholy of Ben Cohen; and I would give a good deal to watch his bewildered reactions to the intellectual gyrations of that Pavlowa of law, Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold.

It will take some time for Lord Halifax to accustom himself to the atmosphere of Washington. That whispering gallery of the world is a natural theater of the extrovert; and whatever Lord Halifax is, an extrovert he is not. He will need time to accustom himself to a world where events refuse ever to stay in shape and where almost everyone has a panacea for the ills of the world. I think he will find it difficult to attain that level of accessibility which, as Tocqueville pointed out a century ago, is endemic in the political life of America. My guess is that he will live in a series of concentric circles, a very small group of American intimates whom he will trust absolutely and the larger groups beyond, whose interest will always leave him a little timid and distraught. I am sure he will be amazed at the passion in Washington for talk for the sake of talk.

BUT I SUSPECT also that Washington and, as far as he sees it, America beyond are going to do a great deal for Lord Halifax's education. It is no secret now that President Roosevelt educated Lord Lothian into a liberalism which, in the last six months of his life, had vistas he had not previously seen; I hazard the guess that the President will have something of the same influence on Lord Halifax. I think, too, that the intensity of free comment which results from the American political system will be very good for him; a British foreign secretary is normally far too sheltered from the blasts of that comment. I hope it will be insisted that he take the time to visit the Columbia River basin; the sight and significance of the Coulee Dam, seen in its proper perspective, might through his mind have a considerable effect upon the receptivity of British conservatism to the possibilities of large-scale experiment. Indeed, in general he is going to learn much from the very restlessness and adaptability of the home Americans. And I cannot but feel that most of what he learns will greatly enlarge the horizons his experience has so far compelled him to scan.

Lord Halifax has his blind spots and they have been bad blind spots. I doubt whether he has ever really understood the Russian revolution and I am certain he never grasped internally or internationally the implications of the civil war in Spain. It is a mistake to conclude from either of these or from his part in Munich that he is a Chadband conservative of the Birmingham school. In essence, Lord Halifax is an eighteenth century Whig of the type of whom Burke was the supreme embodiment. He would have stood where Burke stood, even on America, Ireland and India; there is no doubt at all he would have stood also where Burke stood even on the French Revolution. He would have understood at once the agrarianism of Thomas Jefferson, though he would have deprecated profoundly his curious faith in the common man. He would have admired but feared Alexander Hamilton. Of them all, his heart would have gone out most to George Washington. His massive integrity, his sense of inescapable duty, his remoteness, his hatred of faction, even, if I may say so, that profound dullness which was an inherent part of Washington's character—all this would have made a profound appeal to Lord Halifax. Character is a quality that moves him; his interest in the play of intelligence is circumscribed and a little puzzled. We have sent to America, in fact, as our representative about the most representative member of our governing class since Lord Lyons was there. I think he will do a big job if America helps him grasp its proportions. At least, the admirable work of his predecessors has given him a firm foundation upon which to build.

Fair Enough

We're Too Busy

THIS merry-go-round is whirling so fast now that it is impossible to see anything distinctly and an issue is no sooner raised than it vanishes from view and other shapeless, fuzzy objects fly past. Questions are not settled but forgotten. In principle crooked political machines are still bad, but in practice they delivered the vote for President Roosevelt in November, and now we are much too busy with urgent problems of life and death to remember.

So, in Jersey City and Chicago, crooks who were useful to the Administration in the campaign escape the penalties which in a less jumbled time were inflicted on Tom Pendergast in Kansas City. Labor unions which were extorting high fees from workmen for permission to work on defense projects get together and promise not to strike and to moderate their graft. And public opinion hurriedly accepts that as a satisfactory settlement of the whole issue.

There is no time to bother with an honest, clean decision whether unions have a right to lasso men and then call out these captives on strike against the national defense. There is no time to decide honestly whether unions have a right to exact license fees from workmen. We are willing to settle for a vague promise that they will not extort too much, and let it go at that.

THE PRESIDENT himself, always glib with epithets, adopts the term "appeaser" to insult and discredit honest, patriotic men who resist his course, and none of us has time to argue or to listen to an argument that they have a right to their beliefs and to respectful treatment.

Are they all honest, patriotic men who oppose the President? Of course not, because Hitler's agents, Mussolini's dwindling groups and Communists all are what might be called appeasers. But many good Americans oppose intervention, and we are too busy and hurried to be fair to them. The same propagandists and statesmen who angrily resented the general classification of New Deal radicals as Reds, whether they were Stalinists or not, now call all men "appeasers"—a word which suggests disloyalty and covert Hitlerism—who disagree with the Government's war program. Harold Ickes, for one, who has consorted with the Communists and resented comment on that fact, called Charles Lindbergh a Fifth Columnist, which is a new term for traitor.

I HAPPEN to agree with the President, except when he speaks of reforming the whole world, which I think is political baby-talk, but I don't think Lindbergh should be charged with intent to sell out his country to a foreign foe unless he then be given a chance to face his accuser in a public trial and to punish him for a false accusation. But Lindbergh will never have that chance. Events are going by too fast; we are too busy.

The President promises, in a blurry way, that the material aid which will be sent to the enemies of our enemies will be returned in the same form or in the form of goods. Does anyone believe that? Probably not, but we haven't time to stop and talk it out. It didn't even sound well when he said it, but something had to be said on the subject, and it was impossible to say that this time the debtor nations would pay back their loans in money.

We know they will never pay for this war equipment in money, marbles or chalk, but we have to be told that they will until, eventually, we come to the point of conceding that they can't pay and that we shouldn't ask them to. When this war is over there won't be any money in which they could pay us, and if they should try to pay us in manufactured stuff our Navy would sink their cargo boats a thousand miles out to protect our standard of living from the competition of cheap European labor.

BY THAT TIME we won't be needing their rubber. We will be making rubber out of wind, will power and seaweed, and the dirty duPonts of Delaware will be yanked before Congress again to confess that they deliberately conspired to do us out of our need for this raw material with which the British were going to pay.

And there is no use looking now, we are going so fast, but do you remember what the President said about his determination that nobody would get rich out of this war? You can't see much more than the outlines now, but wait until the merry-go-round slows down and your vision clears. You'll see millionaires all right. I am afraid to think what else we will see when the merry-go-round slows down.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The End Of The "Labor Problem"

IT IS OFTEN ASKED whether labor is to retain, extend, or sacrifice its "social gains" during the emergency. I wonder whether this is not one of those falsely defined questions which are bound to raise a false argument and lead to a false conclusion. So perhaps it may be useful to ask ourselves what we mean by the social gains of labor.

As compared with its position in the first World War and in the 1920's, labor has made three great social gains. One, labor has achieved a new status in American life. Whereas in the past employees had the legal right to organize and to bargain collectively, they have in recent years gained not only the active protection of this right but also the recognition as a matter of public policy that the exercise of this right is in the national interest. Where formerly unionism was tolerated, now it is preferred; where formerly the representatives of labor were acting as a pressure group on the outside, today they are on the inside participating directly and continually in the shaping of national policy.

Second, labor has achieved a new security in that protection against unemployment and destitution and helpless old age is a recognized public obligation.

Third, labor, when employed, has gained considerably higher rates of pay per hour.

WHETHER these gains are to be retained, extended or sacrificed will depend on whether labor leaders act as responsible insiders or as irresponsible outsiders in the national defense effort. They have gained a new status; they are recognized participants in the inner councils of the Nation. But they will hold this position only if they exercise it efficiently and effectively, only if they discard the notion that they are still on the outside looking in, only if they act as men already on the inside who are personally responsible for the whole result.

This is the crucial point in the whole situation. The relations between labor and defense cannot be regulated by new laws, by mechanical devices, by specific bargains, unless in the first instance the leaders of labor take the view that the success of the defense program is their own vital interest and, because of their own new status, their own personal responsibility.

THAT IS WHY the proposals of Mr. Reuther are of such historic importance; they are the first great plan which organized labor has offered in its status, not of the hired man, but of the responsible partner. The details of the plan, like the details of many another plan offered, for example, by the Army or the Navy or the Air Corps, may be unworkable. That does not matter. In any cabinet, in any council, plans are proposed which have to be reshaped in discussion. What does matter, and it matters enormously, is the fact that Mr. Reuther, speaking for so large and important an organization of workers, is playing an active and responsible part in the battle of production.

For if Mr. Reuther's is to be the attitude of organized labor, the new status of organized labor in American life will not be a theoretical gain but an accomplished fact.

THERE IS, no question about the maintenance of the new security that labor has gained. The moot questions, when men talk of the sacrifices that will be needed, are in the field of wages, hours, and conditions of work. These questions would be insoluble if organized labor treated itself, or were treated by the Nation, as a pressure group on the outside. They are readily soluble if the leaders of organized labor, in the spirit of the Reuther plan, accept the responsibility of insiders for the success of the national defense.

Thus, as regards the question of pay, we may assume that there will be no disposition in the Administration to ask labor to accept a reduction of its established rates of pay. But that much, while preserving the social gain theoretically, does not solve the problem which is sure to arise in the near future. The problem is this: At present rates of pay, even if there are agreed modifications for overtime, the full employment of American labor at longer hours will give the wage earners as a whole a greatly increased weekly income. Their total purchasing power will become so large that they will have to consider the question of how their own incomes are to be spent. For it is evident that if they are spent in such a way that they inflate the cost of living, the increased earnings of labor will be a snare and a delusion.

THE PROBLEM, which labor can solve only as a national problem, is how to use the extra income that the defense boom will yield so as not to drive prices upward as in 1918-1919. One way to do this is to reduce wages: That may be ruled out of consideration. Another way is to impose taxes on wage earners—either income or sales taxes. This will have to be done but only, one may be sure, on the progressive principle of ability to pay, and this will still leave labor as a whole with a very much larger total income in dollars than it has had in the past or has now.

This larger dollar income is a social gain provided that the extra income is correctly used. We know from experience elsewhere how in principle under war conditions extra income can be correctly used. It is correctly used if it is spent on goods and services that do not draw upon the resources of the defense industries, or if it is saved and invested. If the responsible leaders of organized labor will adopt this principle, and will help formulate plans to put it into practice, there will be no inflation, no vicious spiral of wage rates and the cost of living, no general disturbance of pensions and fixed salaries, and no irreconcilable disputes in collective bargaining about wages.

THE EXTRA INCOME that labor will earn can be spent correctly on food, clothing, education, medical care, sports, entertainment, and works of charity. In this country, speaking generally, these goods and services can be supplied in much greater abundance without putting any burden upon the defense industries. Thus the standard of living can in general be raised substantially in many respects. But in other respects it cannot be: When we come to such things as houses, automobiles, public buildings, and many of the mechanized gadgets and conveniences, we enter a field where, in the interest of national defense, purchases will have to be deferred and civilian production restricted. We can have guns and butter, plenty of it: But we cannot have guns and, for example, a two-car garage with new models in it. This is where temporary "sacrifices" will have to be made and in all conscience they are not very serious.

But if such purchases are deferred, then what shall be done with the money that is not spent? It should be saved and invested in the so-called baby bonds redeemable at their face value over a period of years when the war is over, that is when expenditures for defense taper off and civilian consumption needs to be encouraged in order to stimulate employment. On this basis it will be possible for labor to retain its social gains without coming into conflict with the needs of national defense and without destroying the real value of its own hard-earned dollars.

SUCH A POLICY cannot be carried out unless the leaders of labor participate in working it out. And if they do participate fully, in accordance with their new status, we shall gradually cease to talk of "the labor problem" and shall come to think of all problems as national problems in which, as a matter of course, organized labor is responsibly concerned.

Aid Short Of War

By Mark Sullivan

Everything But Men

WE ARE to learn soon what "short of war" means. It means everything except Americans on the fighting front. The "lease-lend" measure now in Congress will enable the President of the United States to supply to the democracies literally everything they need, except men in uniform. So inclusive is the bill that it includes specifically even "information."

Necessarily the bill includes something not specified that is broader than information. It includes, to a substantial degree, a share in the direction of the war by the President of the United States. For this bill means what Mr. Roosevelt has frankly said it means, and what most Americans apparently intend it to mean. It means that the United States is to be the "arsenal of the democracies." We are to be an arsenal, not merely in the sense of a manufacturing plant which sells arms to a belligerent on a neutral and commercial basis. We are to be an arsenal which provides arms for only one side. We are to be an arsenal which, in effect, gives the arms to the combatant whose side we have taken—for the provisions about lending or leasing or future compensation mean little. We are to be the arsenal of the democracies in the official sense of a government arsenal.

SINCE WE are to be the arsenal which furnishes the arms, necessarily the head of the arsenal, that is, the President of the United States, can say, if he chooses, to what parts of the fighting front the arms shall go—to Britain, to Greece, to China, to north Africa, to Albania, wherever the developments of the war make concentration of arms most effective. The President, in allocating arms to the fighting front, will of course counsel with the military and naval heads of the nations on our side. But his judgment as to where arms should go, on a world-wide front, will have strong weight. This power and responsibility, on Mr. Roosevelt and the United States will tend to increase. For in proportion as the United States gets the flow of arms under way, in proportion as our supplies approach Britain's maximum need, Britain will tend to reduce her own armament manufacture, preferring to use her man power for her army and navy.

In effect, the direction of the war will be divided between the military and naval high command in Britain, and the economic high command, who will be the President of the United States. And in modern war, it is a question whether the economic high command is inferior to the military and naval. As the military and naval general headquarters will be London, the economic general headquarters will be Washington. To suppose that the economic high command and GHQ is not in the war is a supposition which the Axis powers will hardly share.

IT SHOULD be an enormously powerful combination, if Britain can hold out until it gets under way—Britain with command of the seas, the United States with its enormous economic resources and its capacity for mass production of every kind of supplies, armament, planes, ships both mercantile and naval, food, everything, to say nothing of our gold which is three-fourths of all in the world. The moment when Hitler realizes the power of this combination will be a historic moment.

How soon will Hitler and Mussolini realize it? The psychological effect should be present already, for the common assumption in Washington is that the bill will be passed. Congress may make changes, but there seems little likelihood there will be much limitation on the central purpose and effect of the measure, the throwing of the entire economic power of the United States on the side of the democracies. Hitler and Mussolini may as well take account of the psychological effect at once. If they think they know a way of bringing the war to conclusion, and victory for themselves, before the American arsenal can become really effective, they are likely to try it.

PASSAGE of the bill may take time. Superficially the time lag may seem serious. This bill is merely an authorization measure. Only after the authorization measure can the actual appropriations be passed. Only after appropriations are passed, can orders be given to manufacturers. But this time lag is more apparent than actual. Already, and from now on, the American arsenal is doing all that can be done under existing conditions; and the output now being manufactured will be available for the democracies from the moment it is finished. The need for haste is not in the passage of the bill, it is in the speeding up of manufacture.

In Congress, the President will have more support for this bill than he has had for some of his New Deal measures. Within his own party, Southern Democrats who strongly opposed some New Deal measures, will with equal strength support the present measure—for whatever reason sentiment for help to Britain grows strong in the South more rapidly than in some other parts of the country. Congress as a whole is less reluctant to create the military effect abroad which this bill will have, than to confer on the President the domestic power inherent in it. Such changes as are made in the bill will be directed less to limiting its effect on the war, than to limiting the personal power of the President. Probably there will be a statutory time-limit during which the President can have those powers.

Life On The Range

"CATTLE, HORSES AND MEN," by John H. Culley (Ward, Ritchie, $3), is an honest and measurably successful attempt to recall those happy days of the old West by one who lived them. The author went out West as a young man, went out in the '80s; he does not give the exact date. He joined a relative in New Mexico, then had a ranch of his own, and subsequently became manager of the Bell Ranch, formerly the Montoya Spanish grant, comprising at that time three-quarters of a million acres.

As he did not undertake an autobiography, the narrative is not consecutive. It is meant to convey the way of life on the range. Many of those mentioned he knew; a few, such as the bad men or outlaws, by contemporary hearsay. Plenty of men still carried guns; so it is hard to explain just what is meant by saying it was a friendly country. Perhaps a few scraps of dialogue will be most illuminating. "A dandy bunch of cow thieves," was the affable greeting of the author to a group of acquaintances, as he came up to them sitting on the front steps of the store in Wagon Mound. "Always room for another," replied one of them politely. And the hostess of a ranch on the Cimarron, a hospitable but free-spoken woman, was once asked by an Easterner: "Madam, could I stay the night here?" She assured him: "Why, yes, I guess you can. Every other son of a blank in the country does."

THE ETERNAL difficulty comes in trying to state precisely what sort of people inhabited the West. It is much like defining the breed of a cowpony. In the Southwest naturally the first horses were those brought by the Spaniards, which must have been of a part-Arab strain. But then Americans brought horses from the East, saddle horses first—for the overland wagons were generally drawn by ox teams. It must be remembered that eastern Colonial America rode horseback, and had a fancy for "quarter horses," that is, speedy in short races. These breeds were crossed, and later Morgans and thoroughbreds were introduced, and an occasional Percheron or other heavy harness type. Some famous lines of blood in the Western horses are now named, as the Morgan was, from one sire . . . A cowpony, then, was any horse that was ridden for that purpose. But, of course, they were generally medium-sized horses of no known pedigree, and probably with some of the Spanish strain.

The cowpony proper was chosen for intelligence in cutting out cattle and working with the rope. Yet there were specialized qualities outside of that; the author had one horse he liked best as a swimmer, when it was necessary to ford a herd. And another, though it was far from gentle, had the easiest gait for a long, straight ride. He rode that horse for years, though he always "felt it would as soon kill him one way or time as another." Cowponies are "too smart" for polo. They learn to follow the ball and don't like "riding off."

So the men, like the horses, came from all over the world and from every kind of background. The Mexicans were there, of course; but in those days a latent enmity remained between them and the Americans. Southerners and Easterners drifted in. There were quite a few English, Scotch and Irish, including younger sons of the aristocracy. The latter enjoyed themselves, but seldom made a financial success. The British who prospered were such as had been practical stockbreeders at home. They first introduced good beef cattle; the Durham shorthorns were tried but proved too tender for the range. Herefords are said to have been brought to America by William Sotham in 1840; but they did not win their supremacy on the range till many years later.

WHAT WAS THE charm of the West? Mostly actual freedom, a man on a horse and open country, with no fences or clock. Certainly, many of the men worked for somebody else, but it didn't weigh on their minds particularly; they could ask for their time any minute and ride away. Or, if they liked, they could go on their own, starting a small herd. The very way of riding was significant; no cowboy ever rode on the bit. The bit to a well trained cowpony means stop. And any one used to the prairie always has a queer feeling elsewhere, that he can't see far enough. The long view was somehow a lift to the spirit. The work was hard only by fits and starts. It was lonely for women and children, but, then, there were not many women and children; and they were at least safe. In still earlier days the long trail drives had the zest of occasional danger. It was peculiarly a man's country, and perhaps, too, it had the attraction of all things that cannot last.

But Mr. Culley is annoyed by these romantic adventure stories of cowboys. "I do not think it is possible to construct a story out of range life, with cowboys as the principal characters," he says with finality. He ought to know. As for himself, he was born in a border castle—the word is exact, Coupland Castle—in the north of England. He went to Harrow and Oxford and studied with Walter Pater, before coming to the United States. He married an American girl (though her father came from New Zealand). About 20 years ago he inherited Coupland Castle, and went back to England with his family, lived there nine or ten years again, then sold the estate and settled again in California. No romance, no story whatever.

Capital Protestant You to Participate In National Christian Mission Sessions

This is the sixth in a series of articles about the approaching National Christian Mission. Another is due on January 18.

By Robert Tate Allan

Washington Protestant church youths will link arms to help "reach the unreached," as the National Christian Mission arrives here on February 2 for a week's stay.

MR. ESPY

They will participate in the high school, college and university phases of the mission. They will attend the mass meetings and take part in seminars. They will stage a youth conference beginning on Friday, February 7, with simultaneous mass gatherings at Luther Place Memorial and National City Christian Churches, both on Thomas Circle.

The noted missionary to India, Dr. E. Stanley Jones, will address the latter, and Richard E. Bowling and Edwin Espey, the former.

President, Mrs. Roosevelt Attend Women's Press Club Luncheon

Chief Executive Given Alarm Clock, Presents 'Donkey'

The Post Club Editor.

It's still Christmas and there is a Santa Claus. The Women's National Press Club gave President Roosevelt an alarm clock and the President presented the club—both Democrats and Republicans—with a toy Democratic donkey because he was greeted with applause "all over the room" when he was welcomed as guest of honor, with Mrs. Roosevelt, at the club's luncheon yesterday at the Willard Hotel. His talk to the club was "off the record."

The occasion was a red-letter day with a capital "R" in the history of the club which had never before been honored by the presence of a President of the United States at one of its functions. Members of the club, with one guest each, gathered in the small ballroom preceding the luncheon and, when the President and Mrs. Roosevelt were seated, entered the large ballroom and took their places at the tables to which they had been assigned through drawing of the reservations by lot.

Mrs. Roosevelt wore a black dress with a rose design in gold on the sleeves and blouse, and with it a small black hat trimmed with a single wing.

Mrs. Essary Welcomes 'Distinguished Husband'

Mrs. J. Fred Essary, president of the club, welcomed the President as "the gentleman who lives in a blaze of glory, being the husband of such an illustrious member of the Women's National Press Club—the husband of Eleanor Roosevelt, columnist."

Mrs. Essary called on the First Lady, as a member of the club, to present to the President, "with some wifely comments," the alarm clock. It was to have been on the Christmas tree in one of the stunts the night of the recent party given by Mrs. Roosevelt for the Gridiron Widows, but inadvertently omitted. As she dangled the clock by the wide red ribbon with which it was tied, Mrs. Roosevelt commented she really saw no need for it when there already were many "alarms" connected with the White House. She warned the President that she would set it inside the door when he held night conferences to frighten the guests away when it was time for them to leave, and would also set it at the door when he was supposed to put out his light. She explained that he had no need for an alarm clock to get him up in the morning.

The head table was decorated with bouquets of red carnations, matched by the chic red hat worn by Mrs. Essary with her black frock, and red hat and dress worn by Miss Josephine Hemphill, first vice president of the club, who sat at the President's right. A large American flag was hung on the wall behind the President's chair and palms and smilax were used elsewhere in the decorations.

In the midst of the luncheon, Hall Roosevelt, brother of the First Lady, came in carrying the little donkey, stooped to kiss his sister, and laughingly handed the donkey to the President. This was President Roosevelt's gift to the club at the close of the luncheon.

Many Notables Also Are Guests

Guests at the head table in addition to the President and Mrs. Roosevelt were Maj. Gen. Edwin M. Watson, aide to the President, and Charles Michelson, chief of Democratic Party publicity. The club officers also seated there included besides Mrs. Essary, and Miss Hemphill, Catherine Remond, second vice president; Helen Fetter Cook, recording secretary; Mary Haworth, corresponding secretary; Patricia O'Malley, treasurer; Ruby Black, Sigrid Arne and Malvina Lindsay, of the board of governors; Isabel Kinnear, chairman of the guest committee; Esther Van Wagoner Tufty, membership chairman; Kathleen Sexton Holmes, hospitality chairman.

Among the guests of the club were Mrs. James Helm, White House social secretary; Mrs. Malvina Thompson, Mrs. Roosevelt's personal secretary; Lowell Mellett, of the National Emergency Council, and Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Early.

Many distinguished guests also were among those brought by the club members. Mme. Ertegun, wife of the Turkish Ambassador, was there as was Mrs. Richard G. Casey, wife of the Australian Minister, who was with her secretary, Miss Pat Jarrett. Others included Sumner T. Pike, of the Securities and Exchange Commission; Mrs. Lawrence Wood Robert, jr., Mrs. Dexter Keezer, Mrs. Sidney Hillman, Mrs. Ellen S. Woodward, of the Social Security Board; Mrs. Florence Kerr, of the Federal Security Administration; Julian Messner, New York publisher; Herbert Moore, president of Trans-Radio Press; Mrs. Bennett Champ Clark, Mrs. J. L. Houghteling, Miss Evalyn Washington McLean, Mrs. Patrick Hurley, and Peter Heydon, secretary of the Australian Legation.

Voteless League Tours School

The need for a new building to replace the present Abbot Vocational School was impressed on members of the Department of Government and Education of the Voteless D. C. League of Women Voters yesterday by a field trip to the school.

The 16 members in the party were welcomed by W. F. Smith, principal of the school, and Mrs. M. M. Catlett, a member of the faculty, talked on the philosophy of vocational education and also told of the work done in Abbot School. The women were conducted by Mrs. Catlett and Miss M. M. Marsden through the class rooms of the building, which was erected in 1883. They saw the students at work in the industrial chemistry laboratory, the woodworking and sheet metal shops and in the old garage used for classes in automotive mechanics. They were served lunch by the students of the cafeteria classes in the basement restaurant.

The League of Women Voters appeared last year before the Senate District Appropriations Committee in support of the Brentwood site for the proposed new Abbot School. The opinion of those who made the tour yesterday was that, in view of the work being given, especially in the defense classes, the appropriation for the new building is vitally necessary.

Mrs. F. M. Walters, jr., is chairman of the Education Department, whose program this year emphasizes the vocational training opportunities offered in the District.

War Tasks of British Women Described by Miss McGeachy

Giving of Service Supplants Demands For 'Rights,' Embassy Press Aide Tells A.A.U.W. International Relations Group

The giving of service has supplanted the demanding of rights for the women of Britain today. Miss Mary Craig McGeachy told members of the Washington branch of the American Association of University Women last night. Guest of honor at a dinner given by the committee on international relations, Miss McGeachy described the tremendous tasks being handled by the women of her country under the simple title, "Women in Britain."

She quoted the recent statement of a woman member of Parliament, "Women have no rights worth talking about except the right to die for their country."

"They are doing everything," said Miss McGeachy. "In the last war, when women were first taken into the military services, it was with the idea of freeing a man to fight. Now they are not so much replacing men as using the special skills women have in the defense work."

As the enlistment in the military services is not compulsory with women, they can choose duties for which they are best fitted—cook, typist, cipher clerk, telephonist, chauffeur or ambulance driver, she said. Whatever their task, they must do a good job, she declared.

"Not only must a woman in the transport service be able to handle a three-ton truck but to keep it going during an air raid without running into a garage for repairs—there may be no garage anywhere near," she added.

Must Brave Perils, And Boredom, Too

A telephone girl must be able to keep her head during a raid and stay at the switchboard if the windows are blown in," said Miss McGeachy, "and she must also stay at it just as faithfully for weeks when nothing is going on and she is bored to death."

Women in the military services are under army regulation and may not resign or get more favors than men in the service, she said.

She described the Women's Voluntary Services as an army of women trained to fill in the gaps as air raid wardens, shelter marshals, volunteer nurses, ambulance drivers, fire fighters, etc. They have also assisted the government in the evacuation of children. All of their peacetime skills are in demand in the wartime setup, she said, and the more competent the worker, the more valuable her service to England.

Members of the civilian defense give a night a week as volunteer nurse or air raid warden or in some other capacity. This means the nurse may work all night "if it is noisy" or have rest "if the night is quiet." In either case she goes to work as usual the next day. The air raid warden is up and out with her tin hat and her gas mask, instead of inside a shelter when the air raid signal is sounded. Her job is to call ambulances, put out incendiary fires and help haul people out of wreckage, said Miss McGeachy.

Women Are Helping In Many Fields

Women are helping in other ways. They are doing much to improve the country's resources even during the war, by encouraging the growing of fruits and vegetables, she said. The Association of Women Engineers in cooperation with the ministry of labor is improving the training of and providing apprenticeship opportunities for women in the munitions industry. University women who are refugees from Europe are being cared for by the Federation of University Women. Younger ones from Poland, Holland and Czecho-Slovakia are being helped to continue their studies with funds from the United States.

Miss McGeachy, who was introduced by Mrs. James W. Irwin, chairman of the committee, arrived in this country from England December 11. Although she is a Canadian, she has spent ten years in Europe, four years as liaison officer between the League of Nations and the International Organization of Women.

U. S. Diplomats Wives Find Adventure Abroad

Life Is No Pink Tea These Days, Avers Mrs. Willis R. Peck, Who Is Here After Months in Frequently Bombed Chungking

THESE DAYS, the wife of a State Department official can not always confine herself to the usual polite round of card leaving and tea drinking. Instead, those who are with their husbands on duty abroad may lead a life of adventure which would have made Richard Harding Davis seem quite colorless in comparison.

In Washington after months in a city which has been bombed almost daily is Mrs. Willis R. Peck. Her husband is Counselor of our Embassy in China and they have been living in Chungking.

The current capital has been subjected to some of the most frightful bombing of any war. Mrs. Peck says they have two air-raid shelters, one at the Embassy and the other in the chancery. Fairly frequently the officials and their wives have to drop their work and rush into one or the other. Mr. and Mrs. Peck made their home at the Embassy.

Mrs. Peck said yesterday that they had seen a great deal of Philip Broadmead, former First Secretary at the British Embassy in Washington. Now Counselor in Chungking, Mr. Broadmead had gone to Shanghai on leave when the Pecks last saw him.

Mr. Peck is on temporary duty at the State Department through the month of January. On the trip back to this country he and his wife went from Chungking to Hongkong by plane and took a steamer to San Francisco. Mrs. Peck will go to New York shortly to visit her son-in-law and daughter. Her husband is due to return to his post, but so far she doesn't know if the State Department will let her accompany him. At present the Pecks are staying with Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Mackay and are being widely entertained.

Eugene Dooman Leaving Soon

Also scheduled to return to the Far East soon is Eugene Dooman, Counselor of our Embassy in Japan. Now in this country on State Department duty, he is in New York at present, but will be back in Washington January 17. Aside from being an expert in the Japanese language, Mr. Dooman also speaks several of the various dialects of that country.

Another bound for the Orient is John Carter Vincent of the State Department. He and his wife returned to the Capital a month or so ago after a harrowing trip across France from Geneva, with their two little children and gallons of gasoline strapped to their car. The Vincents went to Chicago for Christmas, and at that time weren't sure whether Mrs. Vincent would be allowed to accompany her husband to Shanghai, his new post. If she doesn't go with him, chances are she and the children will settle in California "for the duration."

Discouraged by the State Department from traipsing around in trouble zones, many wives are returning to Washington. The procession of temporary widows, which began when war first broke out, continues daily. One of the latest arrivals is Mrs. Samuel H. Ebling, whose husband is consul at Izmir, Turkey. It took her 35 days to reach the United States. Mrs. Ebling will leave shortly to visit relatives in Columbia, S. C.

Mrs. H. M. Donaldson Is Recent Arrival

Mrs. Harry M. Donaldson, wife of the vice consul in Lisbon, is another arrival in Washington. She is delighted because she has just become an American citizen. Mrs. Donaldson was formerly of French nationality.

While people continue to pour into Washington from abroad, many of our residents are taking off for parts warmer and sunnier. A number of prominent members of society are expected to attend the All-American Air Races now in progress at Hialeah Park. The races end tomorrow, and among those expected to be in boxes at the finals are the Honduran Minister, Dr. Julian R. Caceres, the Chilean Charge d'Affaires, Guillermo Gazitua, and George Grant Mason, of the Civil Aeronautics Board.

Sojourning in Florida at the present are Dr. and Mrs. Gilbert Grosvenor, of Washington. They entertained recently at a cabana luncheon at the Pancoast in Miami for Mrs. Grosvenor's brother-in-law and sister, Dr. and Mrs. David Fairchild; Miss Lillian Burke, of New York; Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Muller, Hugh Muller and Mrs. William Muller, of Geneva, Switzerland.

'House-Wrecking' Party Is Given By M. H. Dunlap

Somewhat unusual in the Washington social order is a "house-wrecking" party purely for the fun of the thing. But that was the idea of the late afternoon party yesterday when Maxfield H. Dunlap entertained at an informal cocktail fete in his apartment at 1719 H Street. The building is to be torn down soon and Mr. Dunlap is moving out in the next few days, so he invited in a few friends for a final get-together in his quarters—a "house-wrecking" party, he called it.

The building, incidentally, formerly was the Belgian Embassy, and the site is to be for the Cosmos Club. Meanwhile, Mr. Dunlap is looking for a new apartment. He must move by the end of the month.

Among the guests who called yesterday were Mr. and Mrs. Gardiner Platt, Mrs. Crosby Miller, up from Warrenton, Va.; George Williams, who brought with him Col. Thomas Thrasher, U. S. M. C., who recently came to town from New York, and Lieut. Pendleton Hogan, who went on later to a small party given by Mrs. Emmons Smith.

Still others there were Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Watson, who later attended the tea given by Col. and Mrs. Charles March at the Shoreham Hotel; Mrs. Emory Smith, Mrs. Alfons Landa, George Macomber, Miss Elsie Eckengren, Wolcott C. Waggaman and several others.

The "house-wrecking," by the way, turned out to be merely theory and not practice. The party went merrily along from 5:30 until 7:30 very much along the lines of most cocktail affairs.

CAPITAL WHIRL

by Sally Swift

MRS. ARTHUR WOODS entertained the other night at a most charming dinner party in honor of her mother, Mrs. Morgan Hamilton, who was down from New York for a short visit. Mrs. Hamilton, like her sister, Miss Anne Morgan, has that quality of effective concentration on the subject in hand which makes conversation with her a rare treat. As everyone knows, the "subject in hand" for Miss Morgan is relief for French children in the unoccupied zone.

Mrs. Woods has just returned from New York where she went to welcome her aunt, who is just back from France, and at dinner she was saying how happy and grateful they both were that the British government has decided to lift the blockade to allow milk and vitamins to be sent to the undernourished children in France.

From oyster crabs, preceded by clear soup, to creme brule, followed by fruit, the dinner was perfection. So much so that one guest, when urged by his dinner partner to take one of the very special pears, hesitated before complying and said, "I'm not one bit hungry, but thank goodness I'm still greedy."

THE PEARS, incidentally, were a Christmas present from Walter Prendergast to the hostess and came from Oregon along with lengthy and complicated directions for ripening in the home. The directions added greatly to Mrs. Woods' pleasure in the gift as nothing appeals to her more than a book of instructions. Her children insist that she learned to ski while sliding dangerously down hill with ski sticks in one hand and a book on the hows and whys of skiing in the other.

Receiving her guests the other evening Mrs. Woods wore a gold-colored gown of soft, classic draping and heavy gold jewelry while Mrs. Hamilton was gowned in crisp flowered taffeta. Mrs. Warren Austin wore black with touches of sky-blue on the bodice, very pretty with her white hair, and Mrs. David Finley wore becoming rose-red.

Also present were Justice and Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone, Senator Austin, Frank Kent, over from Baltimore; Mrs. Frank Vanderlip, very smart in black and gold; David Finley, Brig. Read and Angus Malcolm, of the British Embassy, and Walter Prendergast.

DINING TO perfection two nights in succession is very hard on one's stock of superlatives, but Maj. and Mrs. Stewart-Richardson's dinner in honor of Commander Anthony Coleby requires that all the best adjectives be polished up and hung round it like a halo. Dinner was served at two tables of 12. The flowers were particularly lovely, huge centerpieces of spring blossoms, and at each place an individual flower for the guests, red carnations for the gentlemen and gorgeous Belmont gardenias for the ladies.

Helping her mother receive was beautiful Elizabeth Stewart-Richardson, the season's most recent debutante, gowned in black velvet made youthful with touches of ermine. Two other pretty ladies also in black were Mrs. Anthony Rumbold and Mrs. Anthony Coleby, while Mrs. Herbert Pott and Mrs. Robert T. Pell lightened their black dinner gowns with effectively contrasting turquoise.

ALSO DINING with the Stewart-Richardsons were Mr. and Mrs. John Caswell, Rear Admiral Pott, of the British Embassy; Mr. and Mrs. Christopher Bramwell, Capt. and Mrs. A. W. Clarke and Anthony Rumbold. Also Commander and Mrs. W. A. Heard, Barbara Wace, Robert T. Pell, Dennis Smith and Edward Weintal.

Mrs. George Rublee will have as her house guest next week Mrs. Thomas Hepburn, mother of the famous Katherine. Mrs. Hepburn will arrive on Monday and will attend the dinner of the Mothers' Health Association that night. Mrs. Rublee will entertain for her guest at luncheon on Monday.

South American Indians, Not Senoritas, Inspiring Fashion, Says Mrs. Pierson

Returned Traveler Sees Influence In Sportswear

Colorful Turbans, Weird Jewelry Other Borrowings

By Jane Driscoll
The Post Fashion Editor.

A MANTILLA over the hair, a rose in the lips and a castanet in the hand are not in the spring scene for the woman patterning after the South American way of dress.

"It's the native costume of the South American Indian that we are adapting into our dress, and not that of the sleekly-gowned modern Latin," said Mrs. Warren Lee Pierson, wife of the president of the Export-Import Bank, who has just returned from a plane tour of all the South American countries. Mrs. Pierson brought back with her many pieces of weird, fascinating jewelry and brilliantly-colored native costumes made by the Indians.

This South American traveler points out that the chic society woman, usually of high class Spanish descent, dresses just like smart North Americans—except sometimes more formally and in better taste. Designers looking to South America for fashion inspiration seek out the unusual. Naturally they find unlimited design sources in the Indians garb.

Indian Costumes for Sports

"Indian costumes," Mrs. Pierson explained, "adapt into our sport life well, especially right now, for skating and skiing outfits. Indians weave their clothes by hand and are geniuses at combining brilliant, daring colors. For this reason even the simplest motif is unlimited in offering design inspiration."

Since the South American woman is going in for sports more, she will probably buy her sports clothes in New York, Mrs. Pierson believes. Formerly she bought slinky black Parisian gowns. Now she dresses more casually and gets her clothes in New York. She has very definite ideas on what is in vogue through North American movies and fashion magazines.

"Peddlers and women in the market places are the only persons who wear turbans," said Mrs. Pierson. "Turbans are never seen in South America, in the best hotels. But women who come to New York to buy will probably like them." Mrs. Pierson thinks turbans are becoming and convenient to wear. She learned to tie them Indian fashion and wore one during most of her plane trip.

Jewelry, like turbans, is never worn profusely by the well-dressed woman of South America, Mrs. Pierson also pointed out. "Jewelry is only worn by the old quarter natives, especially in Bahia, Brazil," she explained. "And a Bahian woman's clothes are no more typical of South American women than the Southern mammy's costume is of the Old South.

The Bahian Dress

Carmen Miranda, the Brazilian "bombshell" who came to the United States about two years ago, popularized the Bahian Woman's costume. Exotic and modish, she wore her costume much like a person would wear one of Southern colonial days. While singing the most famous of Bahian songs, "What Is It a Bahian Woman Has?" she points to different parts of her anatomy. Though she appears to be naughty, she is really describing her costume.

The Bahian dress consists of a very long, full ruffled skirt, sometimes in a big print, and over it a white jacket blouse which falls loose or tied at the waist by a sash. Earrings adorn the ears and the whole bodice is heavily laden with jewelry.

This costume was copied and taken for granted to be the typical dress of South American women. It is responsible for the turn to native dress of olden days for fashion inspiration.

The currently popular bowler, or little felt derby, taken from the Bolivian "tonquito," is one type of the native trend. Also from Bolivia is the little white-fringed red jacket that Mrs. Pierson brought back to use for formal evening wear.

Most all South American women dress in excellent style, according to Mrs. Pierson. Argentines who are extremely wealthy and have traveled a great deal in Europe dress in the Parisian manner. They, like all South American women, place special emphasis on being pretty. They choose becoming hats with veils, which make them appear more feminine.

Flag Influence Continues Strong

Hollywood, Calif.—Flag waving continues, according to Orry-Kelly, designer, and not only in costumes that combine red, white and blue but in clothes that copy the uniforms worn by the gentlemen of the fleet, from gob to highest officer.

A midshipman's cape in navy broadcloth lined in the white of her casual dress puts Priscilla Lane on Orry's preferred list for seagoing resort frocks. This outfit is one of the many new cruise fashions the star is wearing, although she'll remain right on deck for her next picture and not sail anywhere, unless it's to Catalina.

Make Draperies For Spring

STUNNING—the effects you can get making your own lovely draperies! Friends will be sure a decorator had a hand in these beauties with their ruffled arch valance—a valance that gives a stately height to your windows.

What fabric? Crisp rayon taffeta makes the perkiest ruffles. Then for a smart trimming choose silken cord in a contrasting hue. Hyacinth blue curtains with wine cord or gold with moss green would give any room a colorful pick-me-up.

Your valance is made by stitching three tiers of ruffles to a foundation. To hide the stitching sew ruffles upside down, then turn back, as in the first diagram.

The edges that show may be finished with a turned pin-hem. Turn in the first fold one-sixteenth inch, the second one-eighth inch, then hem by hand or stitch on the machine. Or you might prefer picoting or false binding.

For that final touch sew ono the cord, making smart swirls at each corner. And now for the simple process of sewing a tape along the upper edge of your valance and tacking this to an arched cornice board, as the second diagram shows.

To give your curtains a professional finish best to cover the cornice board with sateen. Also a good idea to line the floor-length side draperies with sateen, a simple matter when you have a few pointers.

Send 15 cents in coins for our booklet, "Make Your Own Curtains and Draperies," to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth Street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address, and the name of booklet.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Mother of 16-Year-Old Girl Holds It Improper For Her to Spend Night With Best Friend, When Latter's College-Age Brother Is Home on Visit

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: A girl friend of my daughter's has often been an overnight guest at our house, after spending the evening here with my daughter, or on a "double date" with their respective beaux. The girls are each 16 years old.

During the Christmas holidays, my 18-year-old son, then home from college, proposed a foursome dancing date to include this girl, my daughter, himself and another boy. They were to go somewhere in town and dance. The children all took it for granted that this girl would spend the night with my daughter, as she has so often done—including other times when my son was at home.

The girl's mother decided, however, that as a matter of "convention," she should return to her own home to spend the night. There could have been no question of moral impropriety involved in her staying with us, of course—as the two girls would have occupied my daughter's room, which is on another floor from my son's room.

The episode was amiably resolved, but it leaves me with a question unsolved. In my opinion, it would have been entirely "conventional" and proper for the girl to have spent the night with us, under my chaperonage. Is this an unconventional view? Or is the other mother too rigid, perhaps, in her interpretation of the proprieties? PERPLEXED.

Listen to Mary Haworth over Station WJSV every Saturday morning at 9:15, discussing problems from her daily mail.

Coy Performance Of Maneuvering Mama

DEAR PERPLEXED: Your attitude toward the situation was healthy minded and likewise perfectly "conventional"—in the sense of being absolutely in line with rules of genteel behavior, as determined by customary usage in so-called polite society. The other mother was, I think, being calculatedly coy, on her daughter's behalf. She was playing the part of "maneuvering mama"—undoubtedly with the idea in mind of investing her daughter with more "romance value" for your son; who might (according to mama's forecast) become habituated to regarding his sister's chum in a casually brotherly fashion, if she were always underfoot on his holiday visits home.

By her thoughtlessly rude and rather ridiculous stand, she paid you and yours a left-handed compliment. The real implication of her attitude is not that your son can't be trusted under his own mother's nose; but rather, that she would like to see him become seriously interested in her daughter, because he is such a nice boy, of such a nice family! How Interest Boys? Asks 14-Year-Old Girl

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 14 years old and not quite old enough to go out with boys, although most of my girl friends do. I would like to be good friends with boys and make them like me, so that when I am old enough, I will have some boy friends to go out with.

My best friend is quite popular with boys—not because she is so pretty (she isn't), but because she knows what to talk to them about. She is perfectly at ease with them. All I can do is stand on the sidelines and watch, with a word of comment now and then.

How can I make a good impression on a boy when I first meet him?—so that he will want to see me again? What does a girl talk about to a boy, when she doesn't know him very well? Please spare the time to give me some help. Thank you kindly.

FOURTEEN.

Give Them a Chance To Air Their Views

DEAR FOURTEEN: You tell me that your "best friend is quite popular with boys, because she knows what to talk to them about." And then, almost in the same breath, you ask, "What does a girl talk about to a boy?" Well, really now! Doesn't that strike you as an admission of extreme dim-wittedness? Why don't you pay closer attention to what your best friend "talks about" to boys? By studying her performance and putting your findings into practice, you should soon master the art of cheerful small talk.

Easy conversation is an attribute of the active, enterprising, outward-looking mind. Girls who are interested in boys automatically, it seems to me, interest themselves in those things which interest boys. For instance, I know a girl now 9, who candidly prefers the companionship of boys to girls—and who therefore has a spontaneous enthusiasm for climbing trees, playing cops-and-robbers, wearing cowboy outfits, studying plane-making, etc., etc. Her social and intellectual preoccupations are an artless reflection of her sincere enjoyment of the contemporary-age masculine slant on life.

You ask how to make a good impression on a boy, so that he will want to see you again. You do it by giving him a chance to make what he believes to be a good impression upon you. You react intelligently, in an "alive" manner, to his conversational wares. Usually you can discover some subject which allows him to demonstate his superior knowledge. If you give him a chance to tell you a lot about something you never knew before, this makes him feel fine and causes him to think you're a pretty swell kid, for a girl.

In launching a conversation with a boy you have just met, make it your business to try to "place" or "classify" him—by finding out what he knows or has to say about (1) sports; (2) swing music; (3) the movies; (4) his school activities and preferred subjects; (5) the person who introduced you; etc., etc. If he has little to say on one subject, pass on easily to another; and keep trying until you hit the topic that starts him talking eagerly. Then, all you need do is listen, offering a sage or encouraging comment now and again. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Darker Shades In Furniture Now Popular

A complete check on the wood color desires of a representative cross section of consumers at the Rockefeller Home Center, made by Frederic H. Rahr, noted color authority in association with Gladys Miller, decorative style critic, has uncovered a decided trend towards the richer darker tones of maple for traditional pieces of furniture.

Almost half the consumers interviewed indicated either an ownership of or a desire for the richer darker maple, with 62 per cent indicating the desire. The darker tone, has been called Federal Maple because its use decoratively seems synonymous with the Federal period in American history.

With the surprising trend towards the darker maple, the survey also disclosed that the strong swing of the past two years to blue is slowing up. A growing interest in grayed greens and reds is also replacing the desire for the pure reds and greens, with the top consumer "want" at present swinging to the grayed greens.

Home Furnishings For 1941 Follow Patriotic Mood

Chicago, (AP).—Stylists responding to the Nation's patriotic mood have given an "all American" touch to the 1941 designs for home furnishings.

Buyers roaming the floors of the two big winter markets encountered everywhere evidence of the "American way" in construction and design of furniture, floor coverings, draperies and lamps.

Outdoor furniture has gone "all out" for patriotism, with red, white and blue finishes on gliders and settees.

Novelty notes:

"Papa and mama" chairs, identical in design and fabric, but with an adjustable back on dad's chair so he can sprawl out.

Airplanes carved on beds in an "aeronautical" suite for flight-minded youngsters.

Twin dressers, joined by a single mirror, as a space saver.

Thread rugs, imported from Puerto Rico, in white or pastels made so that several can be sewed together.

If You Want Trim Hips Don't Wait for Elevator

Climbing Stairs and Hills Necessary; Walking on Level Not Effective; Kicking and Swinging Exercises Good

By Ida Jean Kain

ELEVATORS, escalators and stoutness make special hip exercises a necessity in this streamlined age. The average woman relies on walking to keep in trim—and then takes the elevator for all the up-and-down stretches that would keep her hips slim.

Walking on the level doesn't do it. The simple mechanics of the massive muscle on the back of the hips—the gluteus maximus—are such that it is used effectively only when the hips are flexed at an angle of 45 degrees.

These principles are applied whenever you climb stairs or hills. They are also incorporated in the set of hip slimmers given here. If you will do them accurately and daily you can take down your hipline at the rate of half an inch every seven days.

Try This on Floor

1. Lie face downward on the floor, stretched to full extension, with head resting on the folded arms. Tense the hip muscles and raise alternate legs as high up in back as possible. Keep the legs straight—make the hip muscles do the work. Do the exercise slowly and repeat 12 times, gradually increasing to 25. At the conclusion stand up and shake each leg vigorously to free it from tension.

2. With a tendency to swayback, any exercise which exaggerates the incurve should be strictly avoided, so this may be your alternative exercise: Lie face downward on a sturdy table, trunk on the table but legs straight down and feet on floor. Now raise alternate legs backward from hips.

Swings and Kicks

4. No series of hip exercises would be complete without the wide backward swing and the short kick against resistance. In the first, swing the leg from the hip, letting the trunk move forward and back with the effort. Swing high in front and away up in back. In the second, hold the trunk erect while you make short, jabbing kicks backward, resisting with the muscles. Finish by shaking limbs loosely to free from tension.

150 D.C. Men Leave Today To Join Army

Will Leave for Fort Meade After Induction Ritual At Baltimore

Selective Service induction machinery will roll again today for citizen-soldiers from the Nation's Capital.

Nearly triple the number of Washington men who went into uniform in the ice-breaking "token" induction in November, 150 District residents will leave the city for Baltimore's Fifth Regiment Armory at 7 a. m. today.

There they will lose their civilian status in swearing-in ceremonies after hour-long physical examinations and induction formalities.

Before nightfall all of the 150 will be on their way to Fort Meade, Md., and a year in the United States Army.

At the expansive Fifth Regiment Armory, whose reception rooms, dining and recreation halls represent induction luxury after the outmoded former induction station here, 458 Indiana Avenue Northwest, officers declared all was in readiness for the influx of Washington recruits.

Mindful that the draft now has reached the "down to business" stage with the emphasis on selection rather than volunteering, the armory staff is prepared to rush nearly 1,000 recruits from the Third Corps Area into service in the next week.

The number includes the 150 from Washington reporting today, 16 more Monday and 44 colored selectees from the Capital Friday. At the same time 682 Marylanders and 77 Virginians also will be sworn in.

The starting gun for the second induction in this corps area actually came yesterday when 63 young men from northern and eastern Virginia counties went through the Baltimore prelude to donning uniform at Meade.

The induction machinery, staffed by 16 officers, 16 enlisted men and 17 NYA clerks, is geared to transform civilians into soldiers at the rate of 300 per day.

Maj. R. A. Barth commands the setup while Lieut. Col. E. H. Gist, Army Medical Corps, is in charge of 12 other doctors. Lieut. H. E. Hasslinger, public relations officer, is the man who will read the oath to the recruits and Lieut. J. B. Gunn is in charge of transportation, feeding and housing.

The 150 new Army candidates will assemble at 6:30 a. m. at the National Guard Armory, will be served breakfast—the last civilian meal for many of them, at least for a year—and leave in four buses for Baltimore at 9 a. m. Ensign Edward Clark, of local Selective Service headquarters, will be in charge of the group.

Meanwhile, nearly 800 members of the 260th Coast Artillery rushed preparations for their departure at 9:30 a. m. Monday for Fort Bliss, Tex.

As the gunners packed their individual equipment and loaded 3-inch guns and heavy machine guns on trucks, officials announced detailed plans for the departure.

The convoy will be divided into six units and will leave at 15-minute intervals from the Armory for Richmond, first stop in the 2,400-mile journey. If traffic is heavy at 9:30 a. m. the convoy will be held up until there is clear passage.

The troops leaving by motor include the First Battalion and Medical Corps. The breakdown: Headquarters Battery, 89; Headquarters Battery, First Battalion, 45; Battery D, 77; Battery A, 80; Battery B, 85; Battery C, 54, and Medical Corps, 25.

Second Battalion with its automatic weapons will travel by train, leaving from Union Station at 8 p. m. Troops, who will assemble at the Armory at 6:30 p. m., are as follows: Headquarters Battery, 35; Battery C, 60; Battery E, 63; Battery H, 50, and Battery F, 82.

A mythical aviator and his space ship will come into their own at the Smithsonian Institution next Friday.

The institution announced yesterday that it is going to display the "complete gamut of its scientific enterprises in an entirely new way" January 17 at the annual meeting of the board of regents.

The space ship will be included, and a counterpart of a popular comic strip character will be on exhibition when the regents, headed by Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes, get together in the main hall of the institution for their conclave.

The space navigator, complete with gas gun, helmet and space suit, will be on public view beginning January 20 along with numerous other exhibits portraying progress in science. He has the principal role in the institution's own production of "Futurama"—a glimpse into the distant future.

Highways Leading to New Viaduct Will Be Improved

The new $500,000 viaduct over the Washington Terminal yard, connecting Brentwood Road with a direct route to downtown and Southeast Washington, will be accompanied by a highway improvement program in that area, Capt. H. C. Whitehurst announced yesterday.

Plans for the viaduct, which will be erected by the Pennsylvania and Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Companies, have been approved by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the District Commissioners. Purpose of the yard crossing is to relieve traffic pressure on Rhode Island and New York Avenues Northeast.

The new span will connect Ninth Street and Brentwood Road Northeast, with New York Avenue and Sixth Street Northeast, extended. Brentwood Road, from Rhode Island Avenue to the new bridge will be widened to 44 feet; Sixth Street will be extended to meet the terminus of the span and Mount Olivet Road Northeast will be extended to meet the viaduct. The bridge, which will be of steel design, will be 44 feet in width.

Two Treasury Officials to Talk On Radio Tonight

Two Treasury Department officials—Frank A. Birgfeld, chief clerk, and E. R. Ballinger, personnel director—will be guests on the Federal employe program, Your Government This Week, over WJSV at 7:35 tonight.

BALLINGER

Jerry Kluttz, editor of The Post's Federal Diary, will comment on news of the week of interest to Federal employes. The program is sponsored by the Federal Employes Council.

The Treasury officials will discuss the welfare of Government employes, with emphasis on the thousands of new workers being brought to Washington and the importance of getting them settled in proper surroundings.

BIRGFELD

Both Birgfeld and Ballinger are outstanding examples of successful career men in the Government service. Birgfeld has been chief clerk so long that most Treasury employes feel he has always been in the job. Ballinger was appointed director of personnel when the office was created February 1, 1939. He formerly worked at Internal Revenue.

Capper Offers D. C. Primary Bill Again

Recommendations Of Commissioners Are Incorporated In Senate Measure

Senator Capper (Republican), of Kansas, yesterday reintroduced a bill providing for the primary election of delegates to the national party conventions, as well as national committeemen and committeewomen for the District.

Amended to conform with recommendations made last year by the District Commissioners, the bill would require that nominations be certified by at least 50 voters of the same political party as the nominee.

Persons voting in the party primaries would have to be citizens of the United States and residents of the District for at least five years and without voting privileges in any State.

A board of elections of three members, not more than two of the same political party, would be appointed by the President for four-year terms. A District appropriation of $10,000 each Presidential election year would be authorized to finance the elections.

"I believe the bill will have the unqualified support of a great majority of the residents of the District," Capper said.

"Under the present practice a small group of persons have obtained control of the party machinery of both political parties in the District. . . .

"Delegates to party conventions from the District might conceivably have deciding votes in the national party nominations at any national convention. Therefore it is highly desirable that they represent truly and officially the residents of the District."

Casey May Get D. C. Appropriations Post

Strings may be pulled, it was learned yesterday, to have Representative Casey (Democrat), of Massachusetts, appointed chairman of the House Subcommittee on District Appropriations.

Casey was rejected by House leaders two years ago, when he was in line for the post, on the ground that he was "a spender." However, the leadership has since changed. Majority Leader McCormack is a stanch backer of Casey, who still is receptive to the appointment.

Chairman Taylor has postponed selection of a subcommittee chairman to succeed Millard Caldwell until some of the more important national appropriation bills are out of the way.

Meanwhile it was learned, Representative John Edward Sheridan (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, has been assured appointment on the House District Committee.

Seven vacancies on the committee are expected to be filled early next week.

Sheridan, who resides in Philadelphia, is a lawyer versed in municipal tax problems. In 1937 he was secretary of the board of revision of taxes of Philadelphia County. He was elected to the Seventy-sixth Congress at a special election in November, 1939, and was reelected last November.

Congress Gets 1940 ADA Report

2 Projects Finished, 7 Others Under Way, In Active Year, Figures Reveal

The annual report of the Alley Dwelling Authority, revealing one of the most active years in the history of the agency, yesterday was transmitted to Congress by President Roosevelt.

The fiscal year, which ended June 30, 1940, witnessed the beginning of or completion of nine separate housing projects, five of which involved slum clearance.

Bringing the report up to date, John Ihlder, ADA executive officer, yesterday pointed out that two of the projects are now partly occupied, another will be opened this spring and the fourth in midsummer, while architectural plans are about finished for three others. Land acquisition is still under way for the remaining two.

Bids will be opened January 24 for construction of the Kelly Miller dwellings, comprising approximately 170 housing units which will be erected near Howard University.

The nine-project program will provide homes for 2,700 low-income families, 543 for white occupancy and the remainder colored. This is exclusive of 386 dwelling units built previously by the Authority and the old houses which are being rented by the agency pending their replacement by standard housing.

Citing an acute shortage of dwellings for families of low income, the report said:

"The housing shortage bears with especial severity upon the poorer people, many of whom live a family to a room in old, dilapidated dwellings . . . The Authority's purpose is to gradually rid the Capital City of its worst dwellings, in that way gradually raising the bottom, and at the same time provide other and fit dwellings for a population equal to that which is displaced."

The eight projects, besides Kelly Miller Dwellings, on which the Alley Dwelling Authority is now working are as follows:

Fort Dupont Dwellings, Anacostia. About 50 units out of 326 already completed and occupied, remainder to be ready in a few weeks.

Ellen Wilson Dwellings, Seventh and I Streets Southeast. About a dozen families now living there, with full occupancy scheduled next month. Homes to be provided for 217 families.

Frederick Douglass Dwellings, Anacostia. To be completed in May or June.

Carrollsburg Dwellings, near Navy Yard. To be completed this summer.

James Creek Dwellings, near Canal and O Streets Southwest. Plans nearing completion for about 300 dwellings in one-family row houses and two-story flats.

Two whose sites are still in process of acquisition and cannot yet be divulged.

Logan Jewelry Recovered; Maid Held

A few hours after theft of jewelry valued at $733 was reported by Mrs. Lenora Logan, of 4350 P Street Northwest, police arrested a colored maid in the Logan home and recovered the gems. Mrs. Logan is the wife of Frank Logan, of the Logan Motor Co.

After questioning the maid, whom they said admitted taking the jewelry, Detectives George Thornton and H. H. Moore found the loot hidden in the rafters of the home. The maid was held at the Women's Bureau for investigation.

Included in the loot were a diamond-studded dinner ring valued at $500, a $150 diamond solitaire and two other rings.

Nervous Woman Saved From Leap

A 33-year-old woman was in Gallinger Hospital last night under observation after she apparently attempted to jump from the Klingle Street Bridge yesterday.

Leo Hessler, of 3417 Quesada Street Northwest, told police he was driving across when he saw the woman standing on the ledge outside the guard rail. He said he stopped his car and caught her before she leaped.

At Emergency Hospital where doctors said she was highly nervous, she was given a sedative and sent to Gallinger Hospital.

Kin of Alabama's First Chief Wed Here

With the blessing of newspaper reporters at Police Headquarters, to whom they had applied for guidance, a great-granddaughter of the first Governor of Alabama and an Alexandrian were married here last night.

The bride was Shirley Hopkins Smith, 22, of Birmingham, Ala. The groom was Anthony Di Giandomenico, employed by an Alexandria contractor. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Howard Wilkinson, rector of St. Thomas' Episcopal Church.

'Too Scared to Fight,' Man, 63, Fells 6-Foot Accoster

A 63-year-old man traded blows with a 6-foot assailant last night with nothing to show for the fight except a pair of broken spectacles.

Charles A. Butler, a printer with the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, said a man accosted him as he parked his car at Georgia Avenue and Park Road Northwest.

"I was too scared to fight," reported Butler, "but my right fist swung automatically, and the man fell to the ground."

Butler wasn't able to keep him there, however, and got kicked several times in the stomach. Then his attacker got to his feet, dealt the printer a blow to the jaw (smashing his glasses) and fled.

More successful in hold-up attempts were men who assaulted Fred Gerow, 127 E Street Northwest, on G Street Between Fourth and Fifth Streets Northwest. Gerow received a broken jaw in the fight, and the men took $10 from his pocket, he told police.

Louise Carter, clerk in a High's ice cream store at 1320 Eleventh Street Northwest, was forced to hand over $8.50 of the day's receipts to a bandit, she reported to police.

Archibald S. Pinkett, 748 Harvard Street Northwest, said he surrendered $35 to a man who held him up last night. He was treated at Freedmen's Hospital for injuries.

Chevy Chase Shop Teacher Invents New Model of Saw

Portable Device Combines Functions Of Bench and Swinging Cutting Tools, Milton Arnold, Leland Instructor, Says

Charles Milton Arnold, shop teacher at Leland Junioor High School, Chevy Chase, Md., has been monkeying with the buzz saw and now he believes he has invented something that will be of great value to the builder and carpenter.

After years of patient effort, he has invented a portable power-driven circular saw which combines in one tool the advantages of a standard bench saw and a cut-off saw of the swinging or radial type. The invention is simple, compact, and manufacturable at a reasonable cost.

The new saw can cut at various angles both on the edge and the surface of wood without moving the material. It may be powered either by gasoline or electric motor and can be towed like a trailer to a new location and set up in ten minutes.

In February, 1939, Arnold produced a working model of an idea he had been toying with for some time. He used it to assist his brother in constructing a house during the summer. The saw worked so well he decided to secure a patent.

A demonstration before a manufacturer in Plainfield, N. J., resulted in disappointment. The manufacturer liked the model but decided it was to oexpensive to manufacture.

Undismayed, he went back to work and evolved a number of improvements that eliminated much of the expense. He applied for a patent last December and a manufacturer in Hackensack, N. J., has tentatively agreed to begin manufacture as soon as the valfdity of the patent is established.

Bethesda Methodists to Build Church, Parsonage on New Site

The congregation of Bethesda Methodist Church, which in 1939 built a parsonage to retain their newly-married pastor, are not forgetting a parsonage in their plans to build on a new site.

It was announced yesterday that, because of the "poorly situated" present location of the church and parsonage at St. Elmo and Norfolk Avenues, another location had been obtained on Old Georgetown through the cooperation and financial assistance of the Methodist Union.

From 1928 until 1939, six young pastors of the Bethesda Church left for other fields after marriage, principally because of lack of a parsonage. Determined not to lose the Rev. Francis I. Cockrell, the members rolled up their sleeves and, with the aid of Bethesda business men, personally built the rectory while Mr. and Mrs. Cockrell were honeymooning. The Rev. Hartwell Chandler is the present pastor, and he's married.

The Methodist Union, cooperative agency of 200 Methodist churches in Washington and Maryland, through its trustees made a grant of $2,000 to purchase the new site. It also has obtained additional loans at a low interest rate to further the project.

The union's study committee for the proposed project included Samuel W. McIntosh, nnion president; Dr. G. Ellis Williams, superintendent of the West Washington Methodist District and union executive secretary; Dr. Harry W. Burgan, Hamline Methodist pastor, and Rene Camalier.

The present church and parsonage property will be sold, according to Dr. Williams. Prior to Methodist unification, the congregation was known as the Central Southern Methodist Church.

Death Car's Driver Held Negligent

Cleaning Substance On Windshield Cut Down Visibility, Coroner's Jury Told

Police radio cars were warned early today to be on the lookout for a hit-run automobile which killed a man at Second and E Streets Southeast. The victim was not immediately identified.

The automobile was said to contain two men. The right front fender was believed damaged.

A coroner's jury yesterday exonerated a street car motorman and ordered a motorist held under the Negligent Homicide Act after inquests into two traffic fatalities.

Frank C. Bell, 53, of 3906 W Street Northwest, will be arraigned in Police Court this morning in the death of John Jordan, 70, of 707 Newton Street Northwest, who died at Casualty Hospital Tuesday.

The jury held that Bell was negligent in the operation of his car November 2, when he struck the elderly pedestrian in the 700 block Newton Street. It was testified that Bell's machine, including part of the windshied, was covered with a cleaning substance which cut down his visibility.

In the second case the jury returned a verdict that Boyd Unkle, 73, of 709 Tenth Street Southeast, died "due to his own negligence." He was struck by a street car in the 900 block Eighth Street Southeast, January 2.

Witnesses told the jury that Unkle ran into the street from behind parked cars directly in front of the trolley.

Arthur P. Brown, 39, of 738 Thirteenth Street Southeast, was absolved of blame by the verdict.

Ferdinand Petite, 53, of 2434 Thirty-ninth Place Northwest, sustained a possible skull fracture and possible rib fractures last night when the automobile in which he was riding, said by police to have been operated by Leon W. Trenary, of 2834 Twenty-seventh Street Northwest, was in collision with another at Thirty-second Street and Cathedral Avenue. Police said the other machine was driven by Frank Christmas, of 1508 Varnum Street Northwest.

Taxi in Collision

Katherine Von Rosenberg, 60, of 2400 Sixteenth Street Northwest, suffered serious head injuries when the taxicab in which she was a passenger was in collision with another automobile in the 2400 block of Sixteenth Street. Police said the cab was operated by Virgil A. Gray, of 511 Eighth Street Northeast, and the other automobile by John F. Fanning, of 904 Shepherd Street Northwest.

Struck by an automobile in the 3500 block of M Street Northwest, Mandly T. Iden, 61, of Cherrydale, Va., received a fractured left leg. Police said the automobile was operated by Francis J. Lee, of 4847 Wisconsin Avenue Northwest.

Another traffic victim was Robert Herring, 36, of 1122 Thirteenth Street Northwest, who was struck at Twenty-second Street and Pennsylvania Avenue Northwest, by an automobile police said was driven by Charles R. Cooper, of 1650 Twenty-ninth Street Northwest. Herring suffering a possible fracture of the left leg.

Nova Takes Bloody Decision From Comiskey

Loser's Face Is Grotesque Mask of Red

Comiskey's Eyes Are Badly Slashed by Foe's Swift Attack; 13,000 See Battle

By the United Press

New York, Jan. 10.—Lou Nova came back to the big time in impressive fashion tonight, giving young Pat Comiskey such a bloody ten-round beating before 13,000 fans at Madison Square Garden that the New Jersey Irishman's face looked like a grotesque red mask.

Comiskey was floored twice during the brawl and practically was out on his feet in the final round and the announcement that Larrupin' Lou had won the decision, was unnecessary.

Nova, making his first New York appearance in 15 months, battered Pat's face until it looked similar to Nova's countenance in Lou's last important bout when he was stopped by Tony Galento at Philadelphia in September, 1939.

Nova Packs Wallop

The bronzed Californian gave emphatic proof that he has recovered completely from the septic poison that sent him to the hospital after the Galento fight and kept him idle for so many months.

Not only did Nova box beautifully tonight, but he seemed to be punching with even greater power than in his triumphal days when he beat Gunnar Barlund, Tommy Farr and Maxie Baer. He demonstrated this power in the opening round when he connected with the tall Irishman's lantern jaw with a short left hook. Comiskey dropped to one knee but rose without a count. This was a furious session, as were many of the early rounds, and Lou's piston left hand opened a gash under Pat's right eye. This was the first of a series of gashes that opened as the fight wore on—bloody ruts about both eyes, on the left cheek, on his upper lip and on his chin. Meanwhile Pat's battered nose added to the gore.

Pat Wilts Under Hooks

Comiskey's next trip to the canvas came in the tenth round, when he wilted to the floor after a severe hooking barrage to body and head. This time Pat went down for the count of nine, and he barely rose before the ten-count that would have put him out.

Nova displayed his expected ruggedness tonight, taking Comiskey's thunderous right hand on the chin and under the heart without showing any great perturbation. Pat landed some good ones in the early going before Lou's jabs and body jolts took the steam out of him.

The United Press gave Comiskey only one round, the fourth, which Pat won by a slight margin, although he took severe punishment when he went into one of his foolish bends, making him a perfect target for Lou's steaming uppercuts.

Tries to Claim Foul

Lou's body punching hurt Pat so badly that he tried to claim a foul in the eighth round, but Referee Billy Cavanaugh told him to keep on fighting. In the last two rounds some of the more tender-hearted fans started yelling for Cavanaugh to halt the bout.

This also was a comeback attempt for Comiskey—his first important bout since being knocked out in the first round by Maxie Baer at Jersey City last September. But poor Pat showed tonight that he indeed is not ready yet for the top flight.

Nova, who had but one unimportant bout in the past 15 months, surprised the experts with the improvement of his left jab and with the power of his body blows—delivered from more of a crouch than he used previously. He paced himself well and was fresh at the end. Had the bout been slated for 15 rounds, instead of 10, Comiskey certainly would have gone out.

Nova Wants Conn

Nova, who scaled 200¾ pounds—4 less than Pat—virtually was unmarked. He said in the dressing room, "I want to fight Billy Conn now, with the winner getting a shot at Louis in June."

"I know I'm fighting better now than I ever did before. I could have knocked Comiskey out in an early round, probably, but I wanted to get ten rounds under my belt, because I haven't been fighting regularly. Comiskey is a good strong puncher, and he was game in taking an awful beating."

Comiskey, lying on a rubbing table, while his wounds were being dressed, had nothing to say. But his manager, Bill Daly, declared: "I wanted to stop the fight in the sixth because I thought he might be blinded, but Pat wouldn't let me stop it."

Mike Jacobs announced the paid attendance as 12,801 persons, and the gross gate as $30,482.

Jim Sparks Team's Comeback in Game At Philadelphia; City College Scores

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Jan. 10.—Coming from behind in the second half Georgetown's basketball team upset Temple, 46 to 45, in the feature of a double-header at Convention Hall tonight. City College of New York put on a similar second-half spurt to beat St. Joseph's, 40 to 26, in the opener.

It was Georgetown's sixth straight win and Temple's second straight setback.

The Hoyas, behind by 19-14 at half time, came surging back at the start of the second half. The Owls tied it at 22-all, but the Hoyas went ahead again and thereafter held a slim lead until the gun barked.

Angelo Musi and Howie Kahn bagged numerous set shots to score 13 and 11 points, respectively. Bill Bornheimer got six field goals and a foul for 13 points for the Hoyas.

4,412 See Game

A crowd of 4,412 watched Elmer Ripley's team, behind at one time by eight points in the first half, put on their rousing second-half rally.

The Hilltoppers scored eight consecutive points as the second half started to sweep into a 22-19 lead. The Owls tied it at 22-22 but the Hoyas went ahead again and then withstood successive Temple challenges, the last of which put the Owls just one point behind with 15 seconds to play.

A leaping one-hand shot by Billy Bechtloff brought about this exciting state of affairs after the Owls had fought up from a six-point deficit, 38-32, a minute before.

Surge Too Late

But the Temple surge was just too late, as the game ended with the ball in Georgetown possession.

The men chiefly responsible for the sudden coming to life of the boys from Washington was Slim Jim Kiernan. Jim did practically nothing the entire first half, then without so much as an informal announcement began pouring them in.

Kiernan dumped five through the hoop in his scoring surge and that was enough to guarantee the game for the Hilltoppers.

Temple started out in usually impeccable style, with Howie Kahn flinging in three in a row to pace the Cherry and White to an 8-2 lead.

Georgetown never was able to come close during the opening action as Temple, operating nicely, increased its advantage to 17-9, with no breakers ahead. The Hoya flurry that cut to 19-14 at half-time didn't seem much at the time, but after the intermission—wow!

A second-half spurt that broke a 21-21 deadlock, gave City College its fifth straight triumph.

The New Yorkers took a 5-2 lead at the start, but after 15 minutes of play the Hawks pulled up to a 9-9 tie. Then Larry Kenney and George Senesky got field goals that put St. Joseph's ahead, 16 to 12, at half-time.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

POVICH

They've ruined the fine old game of basketball with their infernal whistle-tooting, to hear Stanley Harris tell it. The Nats' manager, who used to command as much as $100 a game for his own presence on the basketball court, is slightly outraged at what they've done to basketball as he knew it.

First, though, maybe we'd better give you the basketball background of Bucky Harris. He was a big-shot basketball star in professional ranks before he joined the Washington club as a rookie second baseman in 1919. The famed original Celtics are now legendary figures, but they were merely part of the opposition when Harris was playing basketball in the Pennsylvania and New York State leagues. Bucky was on teams that licked the Celtics.

Those were the days up around Wilkes Barre, and Scranton, and Glens Falls, N. Y., when the Celtics were just another team in the league. The Celtics got to know Harris pretty well. After the league season was over and they went barnstorming, Harris would pop up three or four times a week as an imported member of the opposition. The local prides hired Bucky. It was their way of attempting to go all-out against the Celtics.

"This game they play now is lavender and old lace stuff compared to the basketball we used to play," Harris was saying, "I pecked in at a couple of those games at Riverside, college and pro, and I wish now that I hadn't. I prefer to remember basketball as the rugged game that I used to know."

Harris made it clear that he was not blaming the players. He said he saw some fine basketball players on the floor. "But somebody has done an awful thing to the game. I suppose its the rule makers and the officials. The way they call fouls now is shameful. If you put a fierce look on your face, a referee is apt to blow his whistle and give the opposition two shots.

"In the old days the only way we could foul a man was to foul him. But now if you bump him slightly when he's in the act of shooting, or if you make an honest effort to play the ball and accidentally interfere with his shot, you'll hear that whistle. The old Celtics would be bums at this game, honest. They wouldn't know how to act under these modern rules.

"When they cut the dribble out of basketball they took the finest thing out of the game. The dribble was spectacular and put a premium on cleverness and faking. As long as you could dribble, you didn't need to pass backward. But that's what you see in these modern games—backward passing. That's about as exciting as staring at a blank wall.

"And they've put in that fool rule where you can't hold the ball more than three seconds. Why, I've seen Dutch Dehnert of the old Celtics hold possession of the ball without any help for a couple of minutes. He invented the pivot play and there was nothing prettier to watch, with its fast break and fast shot. But they killed that in these new rules. Seems to me like they've deliberately tried to take all the stuff out of the game."

Another thing Harris would very naturally have no taste for in current basketball is the elimination of the center jump after goals are made, and he said so. "What in the world could they have been thinking off when they cut out the center jump. They say it speeds up the game, but they don't have much of a game left to speed up, not with all their backward passing.

"That center jump used to be a big part of basketball's strategy. Every good team had a half dozen set plays that they used to work off the center jump. We'd mix 'em up. If we could get the tap, you'd see a pretty pass or a dribble and a spectacular basket. These boys seem to be so wrapped up in their silly lateral and backward passing that they don't take the shots they should. Under the game as its now played, possession of the ball counts for too much."

Harris shed some light on the old Celtics. "They were the best, no doubt about it. I mean the Original Celtics, who had Horse Hagerty at Center, Nat Holman and Johnny Beckman at forwards, and Dutch Dehnert and Chris Leonard at guards. The worst player on the team was Hagerty. But he could get them that center tap, and that was important. Holman was the best shot on the team, and Beckman was the fellow who could run your tongue out. Leonard was a great shot, too, and Dehnert used to take care of the back court and then move up for his pivot play.

"You hear of a lot of players who were with the Celtics, but those five were the original ones. Joe Lapchick and Benny Borgman and Elmer Ripley and Davey Banks came along later, but they couldn't have broken into that old Celtic lineup. Those five old Celtics could shoot and pass by instinct, without looking."

Harris gave up basketball in 1920, but not of his own will. Clark Griffith wrote a clause into his contract preventing his promising young second baseman from playing the game. But in the winter of 1923, when Harris signed his baseball contract for the following year, Griffith neglected to write in the no-basketball clause.

"So I used to play with the pros up in New York two or three times a week," relates Harris. "The money came in handy, and apparently Mr. Griffith didn't know the difference. But he found out. I came down to Washington to keep a New Year's eve date with my bride-to-be, and Mr. Griffith ran across me in the Wardman Park Hotel. He took one look at a black eye I was wearing, and said 'Stanley, have you been playing basketball?' I had to tell the truth.

"I was in the dog-house with the Washington Club. So, you can imagine my surprise a couple of months later when Mr. Griffith made me the manager of the Washington team."

Eagles Bury Weak Skeeters By 8-2 Score

Washington Hockey Team Coasts to Easy Victory Before 2,795

By Jack Munhall

The Washington Eagles and the River Vale Skeeters buried the hatchet, or rather the hockey stick last night and actually were apologizing whenever they chanced to conk each other over the head as the local team trounced its pet hate, 8-2, at Riverside Stadium.

A crowd of 2,795 paying patrons and several hundred "deadheads" saw the amazing sight of Eagles and Skeeters tromping the same ice on friendly terms. The match was so clean that Referee Bill Chadwick broke his whistle, probably by biting it in half in his disgust at not having cause to blow it much.

There was the usual number of penalties as Washington muffed an opportunity to break its own single match scoring record of the season by tallying only once in the third period, but they were of a minor nature and not once was a good fight ever imminent. All of which was disconcerting if not disappointing to the patrons who have come to expect blood whenever these two teams come to grips.

Knipfel Stars

Blond Ross Knipfel enjoyed one of the most prolific scoring sprees of his tenure with Washington by registering a pair of goals and three assists to spark the Eagles' attack.

In beating River Vale for the sixth time without a loss this year, the Eagles continued to show the punch which netted them eight goals and a scoring mark last night at Boston, and tightened their grip on the Eastern Amateur League lead.

Goalie Gordon Hemming, a fugitive from River Vale, who joined Washington this season, was at his usual best against his former teammates, blanking them until late in the second period.

The Eagles, playing alertly though sloppily, jumped off into a 3-0 lead in the opening period which was conspicuous by the absence of most of the roughness that usually marks Eagles-Skeeters matches.

Knipfel tallied Washington's initial point at 6:28 on a 35-footer from the left lane on an assist by Burrage, and set up the third Eagles' tally with a shot from midice which

Harrison Shoots 66 To Lead Open Field

Arkansas Traveler Turns in 4-Under Par For 134 Total in $5,000 Oakland Play; Paul Runyan Is Second

By the Associated Press

Oakland, Calif., Jan. 10.—Long, lean E. J. (Dutch) Harrison, not the original Arkansas Traveler but practically as methodical, rammed home an 18-foot putt on the final green today to chalk up a new low round of 66 and lead the field at the half way mark of the 72-hole $5,000 Oakland Open Golf Tournament.

The 4-under-par second round gave the Little Rock entry a two-day total of 134, a three-stroke lead over his closest rival and an impressive advantage over a field composed of most of the leading professional shotmakers in the country.

Harrison teed off today with a snappy 68 behind him. The gallery overlooked him since he hadn't figured in the 1940 tournament swing after winning the Bing Crosby and Texas Open tournaments the year before.

Paul Runyan Second

The round today, coupled with a first-round effort not exactly dull, put Harrison back into the limelight. He carded nines of 34, 32, compared to the 35, 35 par figures of the Sequoyah course.

Three shots behind Harrison trailed Paul Runyan, of White Plains, N. Y. Runyan carded a 33, 34—67 round to couple with yesterday's 70 for a total of 137.

William A. (Red) Francis, of Altoona, Pa., and Leonard Dodson, of Kansas City, shared a two-way tie at 140 strokes, the former coming in with another 70 and Dodson bagging a neat 67.

The first-round leader, Lloyd Mangram, of Oak Park, Ill., needed seven more shots than yesterday and finished in a tie at 141 with six others, including the current U. S. Open champion, Lawson Little. The group also numbered two amateurs, former National titleholder Marvin (Bud) Ward, of Spokane, and Ernie Pieper, jr., of San Jose. Little and Pieper had second-round 68's and Ward wound up with a 70.

Big Guns Trail

Back in the field were such nabobs of the game as Byron Nelson, National P. G. A. champion, with a 146; Ralph Guldahl, two-time former U. S. Open titleholder, at 145, and Olin Dutra, also a former National Open kingpin, at 149. Dutra floundered with a 76 today, but Guldahl

Burns Fatal To Father of Dave Allerdice

By the Associated Press

Indianapolis, Jan. 10.—David Allerdice, 53, former University of Michigan football star, died today of burns suffered early Sunday in a fire in which his wife, Mrs. Cornelia Kaesbey Allerdice, and his 8-year-old son were killed.

Another son, David Allerdice, jr., 22, Princeton University star halfback last fall, was released only a few hours earlier from the same hospital in which his father died. Young Allerdice suffered burns in attempting to rescue members of the family from their blazing home.

Landon Prep 25-17 Winner Over Rockville

The home club took an early lead and held it throughout. Score at the end of the first quarter was 8 to 1, and at half-time, 19-10.

Montgomery's zone defense was no puzzle to Landon, Paul Baker, of the winners, scored 11 points before leaving the contest via the personal foul route in the third stanza. The floorwork of Crandall Alford and Chuck Boteler also aided Landon.

Forward Hay led Montgomery's scorers with 5 points.

Mounts Take 31-29 Decision From Cards

Catholic U. Settles Down to Real Battle After a Slow Start

Special Dispatch to The Post

Frederick, Md., Jan. 10.—Mount St. Mary's College courtmen won their first start in the Mason-Dixon Conference at Emmitsburg tonight by defeating a stubborn Catholic University quintet from Washington, 31-29.

The Mountaineers, who dominated play the first half, were tossed back on their heels when the Cardinals inserted a new team that clicked in the second half. Paced by Reidy, and Mulvihill, Catholic U. soon wiped out the eight point half time advantage of the Mountaineers and the battle was waged on a point-for-point basis down the stretch.

A foul goal by Tommy Grodavent put the Mounts ahead, 29-28, with less than two minutes of play remaining and Tim Murphy, a substitute forward who was rushed into the game, pocketed a field goal to clinch the decision.

Tony Zale Decisions District's Mamakos

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Jan. 10.—Tony Zale, of Gary, Ind., recognized as middleweight champion by the National Boxing Association, decisively defeated Steve Mamakos, Washington, D. C., in 10 blistering rounds in the Chicago Stadium tonight.

Mamakos, displaying unbelievable stamina and ring courage, absorbed Zale's two-fisted attack without retreating, and was always crowding in face of the savage fire.

Zale's N. B. A. title was not at stake because the bout was fought over the weight, with the titleholder scaling 163½ pounds and Mamakos 161.

Zale set a sizzling pace from the start, ripping right and left-hand punches to the head and body in the first two rounds.

Mamakos showed a marvelous ability to absorb punishment without flinching. He came back to outbox Zale in the third by keeping the N. B. A. champion off balance with snaky lefts to the face.

The pace was so fast that Zale displayed signs of tiring in the sixth, but he opened up again in the eighth to continue his attack to the finish.

Skiing and hockey are the chief events on the sports program. Countries which will be represented are Germany, Italy, Hungary, Sweden, Finland, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia, Switzerland, Slovakia and Rumania.

Alice Marble Wins Minneapolis Match From English Star

By the Associated Press

Minneapolis, Jan. 10.—Alice Marble flashed the form that carried her to the top last year in women's tennis competition by breezing through two sets with Mary Hardwick here tonight, 6—2, 6—1.

It was the third straight time the California girl has beaten the No. 1 ranking player of England since their professional tour started in New York Monday night.

Miss Marble who won the national championship without loss of a set last year, apparently had only one thought in mind tonight and that was to score points.

Bill Tilden, who was unbeatable a decade ago, and Don Budge put on a great show in the first of their two sets. After Tilden took the first three games, Budge tied it up and then each won his service through the next 12 games. With the count tied at nine games each, Budge finally broke through Tilden's service to take a one-game lead and then captured his own service for an 11—9 set. Big Bill tried hard but faded rapidly in the second set, which went to Budge also, 6—2.

Case, Chapman Sign Contracts

Two-Thirds of Club's Infield Now in Fold; Case Given a Raise

Two-thirds of the Nats' regular outfield for 1941 is under contract, President Clark Griffith announced yesterday.

Rightfielder George Case and Leftfielder Ben Chapman are the latest Nats to accept salary terms. By mail they advised Griffith that the terms he wrote into their contracts were satisfactory.

The only unsigned member of the trio Manager Bucky Harris is counting upon to comprise his regular outfield is Roger Cramer, the centerfielder acquired recently from Boston in the trade for Gerald Walker. Griffith anticipates no great delay in signing Cramer.

Chapman, who hit only .286 for Cleveland last season, was reported to be drawing a $15,000 salary in 1940, but he accepted a reduction in signing his Washington contract. Case, after two years as a .300 hitter, batted only .291 last year, but was the recipient of a salary increase nevertheless.

The youthful Case has succeeded to the base-stealing championship once held by the 32-year-old Chapman.

John Bulla Denies Using Cheap Balls In Winning Open

Oakland, Calif., Jan. 10 (AP).—Big John Bulla, of Greensboro, N. C., widely heralded as the "poor man's golfer" because of reports that he shoots a low-priced ball, said today it wasn't so.

In a signed statement to sports writers covering the $5,000 Oakland Open tournament, the winner of the recent $10,000 Los Angeles Open denied he "used a 35-cent ball" and said those he played were of standard construction.

In the last few days, Bulla said, he has been swamped with requests for the secret of his success in playing championship golf with the kind of balls he was supposed to be using.

Anacostia Stops Wilson Five in 3 Overtime Periods, 27-25

Leukhardt Outstanding; Tech Victor

Maroons Turn Back Western, 26 to 17, in Other Half of Bill In Tech Gymnasium

By Bill Burnett

After three overtime periods and one of the greatest individual scoring performances schoolboy basketball here can boast, Anacostia High's lowly-rated cagers eked out a 27-25 victory over Woodrow Wilson last night in the feature attraction of a public school twin bill at Tech gym.

The other game went to McKinley's "Mighty Midgets," a 26-17 beating of a Western club which was considered a choice title prospect.

To Elmer Leukhardt, only veteran on the Anacostia squad, went credit for almost single-handedly beating the Tigers of Wilson. With the Indians trailing by 23-15 midway the final period, Leukhardt, a lanky youngster, went into action and scored 9 straight points to give his team a 24-24 deadlock at the end of regulation time.

The last two-pointer came with seconds left, Elmer slamming a hard one at the backboard with one hand and seeing it twist its way in.

Then, after the first three-minute overtime had found each team able to tally only a single-pointer, and the first "sudden death" overtime had gone three minutes without either club counting, Leukhardt repeated his circus effort that had tied things up originally. The goal came after one minute of the third session.

In all, the big first-baseman from the Indians' baseball team tallied 17 points to take scoring honors for both games. Wilson's best goal-maker was Don Hillock, center. His eight points beat out Eddie Polhamus and Billy Jawish by three each.

By a split second Wilson was robbed of victory in regulation time, Polhamus tossing up a beautiful long shot almost simultaneously with the blowing of the final whistle. Officials ruled the game a tie, however.

After the opening period of the game, Wilson had carved out an 11-2 lead, but it went scoreless in the second frame as the Indians got five points. That Tiger edge remained almost the same through the third-quarter rest, when it was 18-13, until Leukhardt took matters into his own hands.

Western-Tech proceedings, which were supposed to steal the show, fizzled out in the opinion of most spectators. The Raiders made no battle of it, trailing at the respective quarters, 6 to 4, 14 to 8 and 22 to 10.

Jackie Walsh, chunky forward of the Trainers, again led scoring with 13 points, the total being run up in slightly over half a game of play and despite an earnest attempt on his part to give his mates a chance to register.

Last night's results left Tech, Roosevelt and Eastern with one victory apiece and no losses in the series; Anacostia with an even split in two games, and Wilson, Central and Western in possession of one beating in that many games.

St. Mary's Brensinger Decisions Rauchkolb in Middleweight Feature; Pullman, Furr Protege, Victim of Upset

By Al Hailey

A war of "all out" proportions played to a standing room only crowd last night at Turner's Arena, but it was a war of good sportsmanship and no ill-will—the finals of the annual Golden Gloves Boxing tournament.

A whirlwind finish to the whole business was furnished by Georgetown University's Bob Sullivan and Phil Swantner, of the National Guard, who staged a toe-to-toe slugging spree for three rounds that resulted in a close decision for Sullivan.

Fought Way Out

The Hoya fighter, who last year was a reserve tackle on the Georgetown football team, ran into a series of right-hand smashes and almost went down for the count in the supply of avoirdupois managed to cover up and fight his way out of trouble. He carried the fighting all the way and despite an extra supply of avoirdupoise manged to stand up under the harder but more inaccurate punching of the National Guard battler.

The National Training School won the team honors in the novice division, while the senior division team championship race ended up in a tie between Metropolitan Police Boys Club and the Apollo A. C. with 20 points each.

While the Senior division set the pace in the knockout department, it remained for novice fighters to give out with the kind of action that the crowd wanted to see, and it was Herb Brensinger's three-round decision over Lloyd Rauchkolb, of the National Training School, which stole the show as far as action was concerned.

Brensinger, of St. Mary's, and Rauchkolb waged a ceaseless battle from start to finish, the National Training School middleweight taking everything the Alexandrian had to offer and came back for more.

Fought as Pleased

In the first round Brensinger handled the fighting as he pleased, and Rauchkolb was reeling and rocking from rope to rope at the bell. But in the second round Lloyd staged an amazing someback and had Brensinger almost out from punishing right-hand blows midway of the round. He tired, however, and was forced to cover the remainder of the fight.

Big upset of the night came with the defeat of Charley Pullman, Phil Furr's 126-pound protege, by Bill Scott, of Police Boys Club No. 5. Scott was the master all the way and won by virtue of beating Charley to the punch each time. Charley's trouble seemed to be too much concentration on imitating the flahsy style of Furr.

The National Training School, entered for the first time in the gloves tourney, swept the honors in the novice division by producing two winners—Bob Nolan, heavyweight, and Eugene Hayes, 118-pounder.

Noland, at a loss for a solution to the southpaw fighting style of Jimmy Petro, of the Apollo A. C., throughout the first round, finally found the answer in the second and pounded out a bloody three-round decision. Bob began circling to Jim's left and shooting a straight left hand to the mouth. He worked with this weapon and a looping right so much that Jim's mouth and face was a bloody mask at the end.

The pride of the Petros was redeemed, however in the senior division by Denny's equally bloody victory over Fleming.

St. John's Five Again Defeats Central, 25-21

Johnnies Hold Vikings To No Field Goals In First Half

St. John's High basketers, victors over Central by a 32-28 count earlier in the season when the Vikings used their second team, gave the first team a dose of the same medicine yesterday when they took a 25-21 decision on the Mount Pleasant court.

Held to exactly no field goals in the first half and far into the third period, Central was never able to overcome the 5-3 margin taken by the Johnnies in the first quarter. At halftime it was on the short end of a 16-5 count and after three sessions its deficit was 22-12.

A desperate rally in the last six minutes brought the Vikings to within two points of the winners at 23-21, Johnny Gibbons sinking one of his team's five two-pointers, but a neat bank shot by St. Johns' Dudley in the dying seconds completed scoring and clinched the victory.

Ten out of the 12 charity throws allowed Central in the first three quarters were made good before a field goal was hung up. Sam Di Blasi, towering center, got that one and followed it up with two more, giving him scoring honors with a total of 10 points. The Johnnies' Dick Hathaway was close behind with 9 points.

Draper Loses $250 Judgment To Alma Mater

By the Associated Press

Frederick, Md., Jan. 10.—Western Maryland College today won a $250 judgment against James F. (Bull) Draper, football coach at Mount St. Mary's College, for expenses that allegedly accrued when he was a student at Western Maryland.

The suit, scheduled for a jury trial, ended abruptly when Draper's counsel acknowledged the judgment in favor of Western Maryland, Draper's alma mater.

Draper, a 1936 graduate of Western Maryland, was sued for the balance due on a bill of $535 which the college contended represented fees Draper owed for the first and second semesters of 1936-1937 and the summer session of 1937.

In an answer to the suit, Draper entered a general denial, said the expenses did not accrue in the three years statutory debt limitation before the suit was filed and said the college was indebted to him in a greater amount for services rendered.

When the case was called, however, Draper's attorney found he had wirtten the college acknowledging his indebtedness and admitted the judgment in favor of Western Maryland.

Draper was a backfield star at Western Maryland and was named all-State. He also was a star at Western High School in Washington. Draper's home is in Washington.

Eddie Alloo Eliminates Grant In Dixie Tennis Tournament

Rollins College Youngster Scores Second Straight Upset in Beating Defending Champ

By the United Press

Tampa, Fla., Jan. 10.—A new "giant killer" arose out of the Dixie Tennis Tournament tonight. He is Eddie Alloo, 21-year-old Rollins College, Fla., student, who defeated two "name" players on successive days and advanced to semifinals in the seventh annual Dixie meet.

Alloo—he pronounces it "Al-lo"—eliminated Jack Kramer, Nation's sixth ranking men's singles player, yesterday, and put Bitsy Grant, the Atlanta veteran, out of the running today, 1—6, 6—4, 6—4. Grant, small of stature, was dubbed "the giant killer" when he began defeating tall, rangy ranking players a dozen years ago.

Alloo also is in the "mighty midget"—another of Grant's sports page names—class. Alloo weighs 135 pounds and is a notch taller than 5 feet 7 inches.

To Meet Bobby Riggs

Tomorrow Alloo will meet Bobby Riggs, of Chicago, U. S. champion in 1939 and ranked No. 2 nationally this year. The other semifinal opponents are National Champion Don McNeill, of Oklahoma City, and Frank Kovacs, Oakland, Calif.

Riggs today beat Frank Guernsey, of Orlando, Fla., 6—3, 6—1. McNeill bettered Hal Surface, Kansas City, 6—8, 6—0, 6—2, and Kovacs defeated Wayne Sabin, Portland, Oreg., 6—2, 6—1.

Betz to Play Mrs. Cooke

For the women's singles title, Pauline Betz, of Rollins College, will play Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Cooke, of Brookline, Mass. In today's semifinals, Miss Betz turned back Doris Hart, 15-year-old Miami player, 6—4, 6—3. Mrs. Cooke downed Eunice Dean, San Antonio, 6—0, 6—2.

In men's doubles, Russell Bobbitt, Atlanta, and Guernsey defeated Surface and Grant, 6—3, 6—3. McNeill and Kramer eliminated Riggs and Sabin, 5—7, 7—5, 9—7.

Martinsburg Five Beats Roosevelt

Martinsburg, W. Va., Jan. 10.—Playing without the services of Hymie Perlo, all-District guard last year, Roosevelt High School dropped a 35-21 decision to the basketball forces of Martinsburg High School here tonight.

Coach Herman Littman's Rough Riders, too accustomed to having Perlo keep them out of trouble with his long tosses, battled Martinsburg on even terms the first half, allowed the Bulldogs to increase the lead in the third period, then dropped out of the running completely in the final stanza.

Big Paul Flick, towering Martinsburg center, found the basket after a slow start and tallied 13 points to lead the Bulldogs' assault. Glenville Shipe, starting his first contest, had a hot hand and sank 11 points before the final whistle.

Rooseveit, with a well-balanced quintet missed many shots. Howard Rider, center, garnered the greatest number of points, 8, while Tom Robertson had 6 and George Robertson 5.

Walter Haight Goes South

Brunswick, Ga.

Dear Boss:

In yesterday's letter I forgot to tell you that I have a traveling companion. Robinson Crusoe had his man, Friday; Jack Benny has his Rochester and I have my Jake. Now Jake doesn't always give service with a smile, but he is productive in his own sort of way. In his early youth, Jake must have swallowed a lively ball because he has been on the go ever since, mostly around the Nation's race tracks. Time was when Jake had a smile and a handout for everybody. He had a type of generosity that knew no bounds and still has, for that matter, where his friends are concerned. But years around the tracks and along Ninth Street, have sort of calloused his nature. He has found that a defense is the best offense. Nowadays Jake has two sentences that he keeps repeating over and over. They are: "Ain't doing no good" and "I'm sick." At times, both are the truth. But somehow, Jake always gets places, never borrows or begs and I wish I had half his energy. In fact, keeping Jake put is a problem. He never walks but just hops along like he's walking barefooted on hot cinders.

HAIGHT

Jake really wants to get places. When I picked him up in Washington yesterday and showed him the new car, Jake grunted approval, loaded his pictures (he makes his way selling race horse photos) and climbed in. "I ain't doing no good, but let's get going," was his comment. Knowing Jake and his lively ball, I hated to tell him that we couldn't make more than 35 miles an hour in the new car until we had gone 500 miles. When we got to the other side of the bridge, I put the speedometer at 35 and kept over to the right side of the road. Now listen, Boss, if you have somebody you want to get even with just put him behind the wheel of a new car on an 1,100-mile trip and tell him he can't go faster than 35. It was a headache to me even for the first five miles. We hadn't got much farther when Jake seemed to sense I was going slow. "Something wrong with this thing?" grunted Jake. So I had to explain. Jake looked back. A line was forming behind us. Horns were blowing. Cars started whizzing by us. Jake grunted at every one. Down by Quantico Jake began getting mad. Not at me but at the drivers who passed.

Up to that point they had been giving us only dirty looks but when one guy pulled down the window and yelled, "You Sunday-driving so-and-so," it was too much for Jake. He had only been mumbling to himself but he soon began trying to explain to all. He pointed to the front and yelled, "New car, new car—can't go no faster." Jake was having a hard time telling them from the front seat, so when I stopped for gas he moved into the back seat where he could sit on the left side, roll down the window and give everybody the lowdown. Approaching Fredericksburg, a Massachusetts car behind us kept honking the horn. Jake tried to explain by the sign language. The driver kept blowing and finally swerved beside us. Jake leaned almost into the car and yelled, "All right, you bums, we'll get you tomorrow when we get past that damned 500."

I forgot to tell you, boss, that it was plenty cold. In fact, when we got to Rocky Mount, you couldn't have given me a hot foot with a blow torch. We only had about 250 miles on the speedometer but I called it a day despite the fact that Jake grunted, "We ain't going to get to Miami for a week." I went to bed to keep warm. But not Jake. He has to know everybody in the lobby before he turns in. I dozed off and I believe I was dreaming of winning the 500-mile Indianapolis auto race when I awoke with a start. Jake was shaking me. "Boy! Oh, boy! I really got a story for you," bellowed the excited Jake. I rubbed my eyes. Maybe the town had been bombed or there was a train wreck. Jake's eyes were popping. I waited for his big story. Jake shoved a post card in front of my face and yelled, "Kay Kyser lives here. Look, says so right here on this card."

Always your ace,
MIAMI BOUND HAIGHT.

Field's Up the Hill Captures Flagler Purse at Hialeah Park

Don Meade Astride Filly In Feature

Moja Runs Second With Seventh Day Third; Winner Pays $6.30 Mutuel

By the Associated Press

Hialeah Park, Fla., Jan. 10.—Although class was lacking and the various events were decided over a slow, drying-out track, favorites fared unusually well here this afternoon before a topcoated crowd. When Marshall Field's Up The Hill drove to victory in the featured Flagler Purse, sixth on the card, it marked the fifth success for the talent.

Up The Hill, making her first public appearance since a galloping triumph at Bowie late in November, clicked by three-quarters of a length in the 6-furlong test for 3-year-old fillies. Don Meade, who has regained his winning stride, scored a double astride the daughter of Jacopo. Cleaveland Putnam's Moja, a close second choice, earned the place by a half-length over Mrs. A. Sabath's Seventh Day. Up The Hill paid $6.30 for $2 and was timed in 1:14 1-5.

Meade, who had won on Starweista in the "baby" race that opened the program, broke Up The Hill with the leaders, then nursed her along while Isolde showed the way. Moja, in the meantime, was far back. As the field swung for home, Up The Hill began her winning drive. She assumed command when straightened out and held on tenaciously when Moja staged a menacing belated bid. Seventh Day easily outfinished Isolde.

It was six winners for favorite players and a double for Wendell Eads when Dark May galloped off with the seventh purse by a half dozen lengths. Prince Derek beat High Blame by a length and a half for second money.

Paying $5.80 for $2, Dark May ran over Foxleigh and Symphon leaving the backstretch and drew so far clear that her backers rushed for the payoff windows without apprehension as to the result.

REMEMBERING, quickest away, displayed good speed, but was unable to keep stride with the winner in the final drive. SAM HOUSTON, a factor all the way, held the others safe. SWEEP SINGER and SMART were in tight quarters early.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PRIORITY, $66.10, $16.80, $8.90; ROGERS BOY, $4.00, $3.00; SHAUN O., $7.80.

PRIORITY worked her way forward steadily between the leaders after leaving the backstretch and, coming to the inside of ROGERS BOY, got up in the last stride. ROGERS BOY slipped through on the inside rounding the turn and drew away entering the stretch, but then faltered. SHAUN O., a factor all the way, outlasted RICH CARGO in the final drive. The latter raced well.

Daily Double, STARWEISTA and PRIORITY, Paid $362.50

BLENWEED, racing very greenly, opened up a winning lead when straightened into the stretch to win mildly urged. EQUIOVAL, away slowly, gained steadily on the outside in the last half mile and easily disposed of the others. ROSE-RED took a short lead on the stretch turn, but faltered in the last furlong. SERGEANT BOB had no mishaps.

FOURTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $1,200; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 3:31. Off 3:31½. Winner, O. R. Ferrell's ch. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—RED ROGUE, $6.30, $3.80, $3.20; PATSEY BEGONE, $9.70, $6.10; FORMAL DRESS, $7.40.

RED ROGUE, kept in a forward position under strong pressure, outlasted his opponents in the final drive. PATSEY BEGONE, rated in front early, held on gamely when it came to a drive. FORMAL DRESS improved his position between the leaders and was going fastest of all at the end. BILLY'S FOLLY closed gamely on the inside.

FIFTH RACE—Six and one-half furlongs. Purse, $1,300; allowances. For 3-year-olds. The Biscayne Bay. Start good from Puett gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 4:01½. Off 4:02. Winner, M. A. Two-dollar mutuels paid—VERSION, $6.90, $3.50, $3.10; CAVALIER, $4.20, $3.60; PONTY, $6.00.

VERSION dwelt at the start and was away very slow, moved up fast the final 3 furlongs on the extreme outside and wore CAVALIER down at the end. CAVALIER, lightly restrained until midway around the turn, gained steadily and took command through the stretch, but was unable to withstand the winner's bid. PONTY, well up all the way, held HORNBLENDE safe. The latter hung in the stretch run.

SIXTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,400; allowances. For 3-year-old fillies. The Flagler. Start good from Puett gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 4:31. Off 4:31½. Winner, M. Two-dollar mutuels paid—UP THE HILL, $6.30, $3.20, $2.90; MOJA, $3.70, $2.90; SEVENTH DAY, $4.40.

UP THE HILL broke alertly, disposed of ISOLDE to take command and was under stout pressure at end to hold MOJA safe. MOJA lacking early speed, came out for racing room and withstood long drive gamely. SEVENTH DAY was in first flight early, responded to strong handling and closed with good energy. ISOLDE raced FANTASMA into submission to take command and weakened gradually after being displaced.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $1,200; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 5:00½. Off 5:01. Winner, R. J. Two-dollar mutuels paid—DARK MAY, $5.80, $3.50, $2.90; PRINCE DEREK, $4.10, $3.00; HIGH BLAME, $5.00.

DARK MAY, steadied back off the leaders until midway around the lower turn, took command with a rush and drew out into a winning lead. PRINCE DEREK, well handicapped, closed stoutly, but did not threaten the winner. HIGH BLAME, hard ridden, was going strong at the finish. POLINA raced evenly.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $1,200; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Puett gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 5:36½. Off 5:37. Winner, Mrs. H. BELLRINGER forced pace of NICHOLAS S. and tired through stretch run.

Selections at Hialeah Park.

Dear Al:

After seeing Blenweed in action, it might be safe to say that Whirlaway may have a stablemate in this year's Kentucky Derby. The son of Blenheim 2d and Starweed races as green as grass and had to be taken up several times but he was right there with a rousing finish. He's just learning to run and is entered for all the important stakes. The jockeys here don't like the starting gate. They say it opens slowly and is not as good as the Puett equipment at Eastern tracks. Apprentice Jockey William Emery bruised his right leg and was forced to cancel five mounts yesterday. He is a Chicago boy and does 103 pounds. Dave Woods, publicity director for Pimlico, is a visitor and reminded me that Wayriel and Good Reception, winners here last Thursday, also won on the same day, November 12, at the Maryland Jockey Club course. Earle Sande, the former jockey, took a plane for Lexington yesterday to inspect some horses, and will return on Monday. Heliopolis, which many experts concede to be one of the best racing thoroughbreds to invade this country from England, will be ridden by Irving Anderson in all Hialeah Stake engagements. The 5-year-old son of Hyperion and Drift is in training here, and will wear the colors of Elmer Dale Shaffer in the $10,000 added McLennan Memorial and $50,000 added Widener. Jack Howard is conditioning the horse for his important engagements. Heliopolis ran third in the 1939 English Derby to Blue Peter and Fox Cub. His famous sire, Hyperion, won the historic Epsom classic for Lord Derby in 1933. Heliopolis worked in the mud yesterday, breezing a mile in 1:48. Trainer John H. C. Forbes, of Baltimore, will return to the Monumental City next week. Forbes, vacationing here, has several horses turned out at Laurel Park Stud Farm. A former gentleman rider, Forbes is handling a string of thoroughbreds for Chester F. Hockley, chairman of the Maryland Racing Commission; Howard Bruce and Vaughn Flannery. Hockley has three horses here under the care of Elmer Heubeck.

BILL.

First race—Chilis, a son of Ladysman, may be the right one in the opening hop, skip and jump for juveniles. Breaks from the rail, which is not a good spot in these straightaway races, but has speed enough to escape trouble. Oldwick will have Meade in the saddle and is dangerous. Abrupt to take care of the others.

Second race—Modern Age won his last in New York and has worked well for this. Looks like a good spot. Open Door has speed and is not too ambitiously placed in this field. Hillblond should be a factor and is reported fit.

Third race—Jack Sting looms as the probable favorite in this group and deserves that rating. Won his last impressively and needs only to run back to that race. White Hope was second in fair company in a recent test and is dangerous. Orchard Run for the minor money.

Fourth race—Well Alright is likely to run up to that name in this sprint. Trials have been good and young Huff will do the booting. Dawn Portage is a good one and will be close. Red Mantilla to fill out the cash bracket.

Fifth race—Watch Over was an easy winner in that last. Picks up weight but will have Meade in the saddle and I'm going to string along. The Calumet Farm entry of Bay Carse and Star Chance is formidable with the first named the chief reliance of the stable. Speed to Spare has plenty of foot but may stop.

Sixth race—Market Wise appears slightly the best of those gathered for the $5,000 Hialeah Stakes. Eads will do the booting and I prefer this combination to the others. Zacatine has won four and will be in the thick of contention. War Bugle should take a place in the money circle.

Seventh race—Yantis won with something in reserve recently at Tropical Park. Shapes up well in this field and I see no reason for mistakes. Ozark gets a good figure and deserves respect. Perlette should be a factor.

Eighth race—Mightily set a record at a shorter route than this. Never was in better condition and needs only a share of the racing luck. Endymion and Wise Will to take care of the others.

Best bet—Yantis.

Group Seeking Gulfstream Is Granted Time

Given 20 More Days to Raise Money to Buy Defunct Race Track

By the Associated Press

Miami, Fla., Jan. 10.—A group reported seeking to purchase Gulfstream Horse Race Track, near Hollywood, today was given an extra 20 days for raising funds.

Federal Judge John W. Holland said he did not grant the extension for the benefit of any particular group and the "door is still open" for any others interested.

F. W. Cason, a trustee for the bankrupt Hollywood Jockey Club, told Judge Holland that he understood interested persons had raised 50 per cent of the amount necessary by polling only 10 per cent of a list of prospective investors.

Through Cason the trustees recommended the extension of the deadline for submitting a reorganization plan.

Cason said he had been asked not to name members of the interested group, but he told Judge Holland that he considered at least two of them financially responsible.

The Miami Daily News said the group reportedly included Herbert Bayard Swope and John Hay Whitney.

Terps Launch Twin-Bill Program Tonight

Basketball And Boxing Is Scheduled

Duke Five Invades College Park for Game Tonight; S. C. Boxing Team Here

University of Maryland will inaugurate its schedule of winter sports doubleheaders tonight at Ritchie Coliseum, meeting Duke in basketball at 8 o'clock and South Carolina in boxing an hour later.

Against this formidable pair of Southern Conference rivals, the Terps will be underdogs on the court and no better than even money to triumph in the ring.

Duke's basketball squad, headed by seven lettermen, comes here with only an even break in six games, but Maryland has dropped four straight starts with an inexperienced team and is expected to improve, but slowly. This will be the eighteenth game of a long and close basketball series, Maryland holding a 10-7 edge in victories.

Terps Given Even Chance

Though the Terps have only two lettermen boxers, they are accorded an even chance to statistically kayo the South Carolina ring warriors, who will be led by Conference 120-Pound Champion Odin McDonald.

This is because the Terps apparently have been fortunate in uncovering promising-looking replacements for its graduated aces of the squared circle. Hotsy Alperstein, 145 pounds, and Charley Dorr, 127 pounds, are the two lettermen on the Maryland squad and each is expected to win tonight.

Two Top Fights

Alperstein and Willis Beall, of South Carolina, both lettermen, appear likely to create the night's feature in their 145-pound encounter. Another headline bout should develop between Gunther, Maryland's highly touted heavyweight, and Lucius Henson, who is the visitors' only sehior representative.

Ace Officials Will Handle Brewers' Game

Heurich Hopes Pair Of Good Referees Will Check Roughness

Precedent will be established at Riverside Stadium tomorrow night when two of the most capable officials in the country are assigned to the American Basketball League game involving the Washington Brewers and Baltimore Clippers at 9:30 o'clock.

Tonight the Brewers are to invade the ballroom of the Broadwood Hotel, Philadelphia, for a game with the Philadelphia Sphas.

Owner Chris Heurich, jr., of the Brewers, yesterday arranged to have both Chuck Solodare and Matty Begovich handle tomorrow night's game at Riverside.

"I'm bringing in two officials, and two of the best, because I feel they will eliminate much of the rough play previously noticeable here and also because I believe they will speed up the action," Heurich declared yesterday. "In the event this experiment proves a success I'll continue this policy.

The Clippers tomorrow night will introduce a greatly strengthened team which will include Red Paris and George Slott, players recently acquired in a deal with the New York Jewels, and Mike Bloom, former Brewer center, who will be making his first appearance locally since sold to the Clippers.

Six Leagues Will Contribute to Children's Hospital Fund; Knights of Columbus and Royal Arcanum New Loops in Charity Play

The second annual Washington Post Blood Bank Bowling Tournament will be held Sunday, February 9, at the Convention Hall Bowling Alleys.

The entire proceeds of the tourney will go to Chlidren's Hospital Blood Bank Fund. Last year four leagues contributed $334 to the fund.

Two more leagues have been added this year, the Knights of Columbus and Royal Arcanum, making a total of six. The others are the Elks, Masonic, Odd Fellows and Almas Temple Leagues.

The Elks representatives are the defending champions and will present virtually the same line-up as last year, as follows: Norman Schroth, Phil Heffelfinger, Eddie Espey, Ed Mulvey, Louis Bonbrest, Hugh Waldrop and Roger King.

High School Double-Header Set Tonight

Their second two-headed basketball program of the season will be staged by St. John's and Gonzaga Highs tonight at Tech gym, the Johnnies taking on Woodrow Wilson in the opener at 7:45, and Gonzaga tangling with Eastern in the finale.

Main interest will be attached to Eastern's attempt to improve its undefeated record of five games. The two Catholic schools will be trying to round out their games for the first of their annual battles on February 1.

Roosevelt High, which lost a 35-21 decision to Martinsburg (W. Va.) High last night, will stop on its way home today to face the Navy Plebes in Annapolis. Teams of Thomas Jefferson and Hopewell, of Virginia, switch partners for games in this vicinity tonight. The first beat G. W. High last night, 21-17, while the latter was suffering a 22-16 setback at the hands of Washington-Lee, of Arlington.

Gallaudet's Quintet Wins Over Towson

Coach Smith's Gallaudet quintet, taking a lesson from former games, turned the tables on Towson Teachers, 46 to 32, in the Gallaudet gym last night.

Pivot Hal Weingold took the range early in the second canto and placed shot upon shot through the hoop. Dorn and Stottlemyer, for Towson, tried time and again to outreach the "mighty midgets," but there was no stopping Gallaudet.

In the fourth quarter, Coach Smith sent in several recruits and a free-for-all ensued, netting the Blues 8 points. Despite the efforts of Towson's Cox and Fische, Gallaudet took the game in its stride.

St. Alban's Beats Latin Five, 31 to 24

Washington Quintet Suffers Lapse but Rallies to Triumph

Special Dispatch to The Post

Baltimore, Jan. 10.—Playing their first basketball game of the season, representatives of St. Alban's School, of Washington, suffered a lapse midway of their clash with Boys' Latin here today but came back strong in the closing minutes to earn a 31-24 victory.

With veterans Jim Trimble, Taylor Chewning and Bob Bondy leading the attack, the Saints boosted a 14-13 half-time margin to 20-16 after three quarters. From that point on they had little trouble.

Trimble led the scoring for the winners, tallying 9 points, but he was forced to share honors with Wolfe, of Boys' Latin. Chewning and Bondy each contributed 8 points to the winning cause.

The game started off fast with St. Alban's enjoying its most profitable quarter of the game. Twelve points it scored to Boys' Latin's 7. Then followed the sag and eventual recovery.

George Washington University courtmen will leave this afternoon for their game with the Richmond Spiders in Richmond tonight in the first of a five-game Southern trip.

The newly organized squad of girl cheer leaders will also make the tour. The Colonials will stay at the William Byrd Hotel in Richmond and will remain there until noon tomorrow.

George Washington will invade Columbia Monday for a game with South Carolina. Tuesday Clemson will be met and Wednesday Furman at Greenville, with Duke furnishing the opposition Thursday at Durham.

The Colonials beat both Clemson and Duke here last month.

Hockey Eagles Rout Skeeters

Sandwiched between these scores was Washington's second goal, an unusual one recorded by Center Courteau who tapped the puck into the net from a face off which followed the two-minute banishment of Washington's Burns for hooking.

In the second period the Eagles increased their output of goals to four as Burns, the league's leading point maker, chipped in with a pair of beauties, Knipfel got his second and Germann also connected with the much buffeted River Vale nets. Meantime the Skeeters could stir up only one point and left for the last intermission a much beaten club at 7-1.

Lightning-like was goal No. 4, Knipfel, taking a pass from Burns and flashing the red light exactly 26 seconds after the face off opening the period. More than 12 minutes then elapsed before Burns knocked in goal No. 5 on a nicely executed off-balance shot from about 20 feet out.

Germann was next to score for Washington, tallying unassisted on another long whack while skating hell-bent for the goal. Then River Vale scored as Mattson ended the visitor's offensive frustration on a double pass from Bell and McGregor after Goalie Hemming had turned in several fine stops to preserve his shutout.

Cash Circulation Up $1.56 Per Capita

By the Associated Press

Christmas shopping helped boost money in circulation by $1.56 per person in the United States.

The Treasury said that during December coin and currency circulating outside the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Banks rose from $8,522,105,461, an average of $64.41 per person, to $8,732,885,989, an average of $65.97 per person.

As has been true successively each month for a year, the total of money in circulation was the highest on record except for the abnormal weeks of the 1933 banks holiday.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, Jan. 10 (AP).—Although displaying more nervousness than in recent sessions, the wheat market today maintained a firm undertone despite scattered profit taking, hedging and "short" sales.

Prices dipped as much as ⅛ cent below previous closing levels at times, with May contracts showing the most weakness, but the market's ability to recover was attributed to small lot orders coming from mills and buyers acting on the higher trend of securities. Spreading operations attracted by the wide discount at which September contracts were quoted under May accounted partly for strength of the September delivery.

May wheat closed unchanged to ¼ lower compared with yesterday but the new crop contracts were ⅛@⅜ higher. May was 87⅛@87⅜ at the close and July and September were 82⅛@82¾ and 83¾@83¼ respectively.

Corn closed ⅛ off to ⅛ up, May 62¾, July 62⅞. Oats, ⅛ lower. Soybeans, ⅛@⅜ lower. Rye, unchanged to ⅛ off and lard, 3 lower to 2 higher.

Despite recent indications of increased movement of free wheat in some localities, spot market premiums showed no signs of weakening here. The 12 principal terminals received 393,000 bushels compared with 443,000 a week ago and 365,000 a year ago. Northwest receipts fell off but there was an increase in the Southwest.

Retail Sales Up 8 Pct. Here During Week

Four-Week Volume In D. C. Rises 18 Pct. Over 1940 Period

Department store sales in Washington increased 8 per cent in the week ended January 4 compared with the same week last year, the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond reported last night.

Cumulative sales here in the four weeks ended January 4 were 18 per cent greater than in the comparable period of the previius year. The Federal Reserve report pointed out that in the latest week sales of the Sears, Roebuck & Co. in Washington were included for the first time.

The Fifth Federal Reserve District as a whole showed an 8 per cent increase in sales for the January 4 week as compared with the same week last year. Cumulative sales for the four weeks ended January 4 were 17 per cent larger. The district report is based on sales figures supplied by 17 leading department stores.

Department store sales in the Nation showed a 4 per cent gain in the January 4 week, as compared with the like 1940 week. For the four weeks ended on that date, sales were 10 per cent larger. Percentage gains by Federal Reserve districts were as follows (first figure is January 4 week, second is four weeks ended January 4): Boston, minus 12 and plus 7; New York, minus 5 and plus 7; Philadelphia, unchanged and plus 13; Cleveland, plus 10 and plus 13; Atlanta, plus 17 and plus 13; Chicago, minus 2 and plus 10; St. Louis, plus 14 and plus 14; Minneapolis, unreported and plus 2; Kansas City, plus 22 and plus 7; Dallas, plus 8 and plus 8; San Francisco, plus 24 and plus 11.

Wholesale Sales Spurt

New York, Jan. 10 (AP).—A sharp spurt in wholesale purchasing by mercants started the year 1940 off with a bang, Dun & Bradstreet reported today.

Meantime the mildness of the post-holiday slow-up in retail buying cheered storekeepers, and retail sales for the Nation as a whole averaged 7 to 12 per cent above a year ago.

"Wholesale markets sprang to life with a sharp increase in buyer arrivals at January trade shows," the credit agency said. "Initial reports from these events were highly encouraging. Larger sales budgets than a year ago appeared the general rule. Buyers were in a mood to make early commitments and in the first few days orders were on a scale in excess of the volume booked during any comparable period in years."

Reasons given for increased wholesale purchases were (1) unusually low store supplies, (2) expectations of sales expansion, and (3) fear of shortage and of price changes.

Home furnishings, floor coverings, shoes and dry goods were among items said to be in strong demand in wholesale markets.

Sloss-Sheffield Acts To Boost Coke Output

Birmingham, Ala., Jan. 10 (AP).—Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. embarked today on an emergency move to add 100,000 tons annually to its foundry coke capacity by restoring to operation 87 bee-hive type ovens idle since the World War.

Coke has been a bottleneck in Birmingham iron and steel production, with stocks running perilously low.

Rail Bonds Hog Spotlight, Reach New Tops; Stock List Closes With Moderate Gains

By Frederick Gardner
Associated Press Financial Writer.

New York, Jan. 10.—The stock market today lost some of its rising vigor but managed to keep general trends pointing slightly upward. Rials, well out in front in the forenoon in lively dealings, backed down to a narrow range at the last and steels cancelled initial advances. Utilities, rubbers, oils and specialties did fairly well although top gains were shaded in virtually all departments at the close.

Heavy buying in secondary carrier bonds continued in the loans section with volume for all loans touching the second highest mark since September, 1939.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks tacked on .1 of a point at 45. It was the seventh consecutive session in which this composite has been up or unchanged.

Activity in the share list tapered off appreciably in the latter part of the proceedings and transfers totaled 751,670 shares, compared with 858,860 the day before.

Many customers with fair-sized profits on the lengthy upturn cashed in part of their commitments for safety's sake over the week-end. Recovery sentiment still predominated, however, as the huge national budget for defense and other purposes was expected to spur many lines of business and industry and result in comfortable earnings despite boosted taxes and a possible ceiling which might be placed over prices by the Government.

Railway securities still were buoyed by the outlook for mounting operating revenues and the likelihood most roads would escape excess profits imposts. Motors did virtually nothing although this week's output of new cars was estimated the largest for any similar January week in history.

Among stocks Louisville & Nashville went into new high ground for 1940-41, but finished unchanged. United States Rubber and Air Reduction were up better than a point each. Lesser advances were retained by Great Northern, Pennsylvania, Union Pacific, Chesapeake & Ohio, Goodyear, United Aircraft, International Nickel, Western Union, Consolidated Edison, Bond Stores, Woolworth and South American gold.

General Motors was up ⅛ and Chrysler unchanged. Bethlehem and Republic Steels were a shade under, as were du Pont, Santa Fe, Anaconda, Montgomery Ward, Douglas Aircraft and J. I. Case.

The surge of interest in rails has been attributed to a marked rise of confidence in investment quarters that the transportation industry, under the defense drive, was destined for a large gain in revenues.

Rail bonds, a large number of which still are selling well below par, were seen as in line to benefit from revenue gains, since, unlike stocks, interest coverage is deductible before the tax collector assesses his claims against net income.

Today a few of the carriers which had moved up fast earlier in the week dropped back a little under profit selling but traders combed the list for "sleepers" of neglected issues and some of this category registered advances running to as much as $35 per $1,000 issue.

Boston & Maine 4¾s ended at 75, up 3½ points; Erie & Jersey 6s at 88½, up 2¾; Cleveland Union Terminal 5½s of '72 at 88, up 1½, and New Haven 4s of '56 at 22½, up 2¼.

United States Governments came back a little more in a rally which started yesterday after Secretary Morgenthau said the recent decline, associated with the Federal Reserve Board's proposals for further monetary control, had been unwarranted.

Detroit, Jan. 10 (AP).—Ward's Reports, Inc., today estimated output of the automobile plants for the current week at 115,935 cars and trucks for the highest January production week in the industry's history. The previous January high was 111,330 assemblies this week a year ago.

The trade publication said the gain was greater than had been anticipated following the holiday lull and indicated a January total of at least 450,000 assemblies. The highest previous January output was 449,492 units a year ago.

Cotton Futures

"Your Hit Parade," the Columbia network's march of favorite melodies, falls right into step with the times tonight. It joins the Army.

Inaugurating a new entertainment idea, a portion of the Hit Parade is to come from Fort Myer, just across the Potomac. This "extra" will consist of the playing of Eddie Duchin's Orchestra, specially engaged by the tobacco sponsors to entertain the boys in training.

A special show is being put on at Washington's Army post. Not only is the famed Duchin band to be there, but there'll be dancers, singers, magicians and a master of ceremonies to provide a full hour and a half entertainment. Then, in the middle of the "Hit Parade," a portion of that entertainment will be incorporated in the Nation-wide broadcast.

After Fort Myer, this special "Hit Parade" innovation is to come each week from a different Army post. There'll be different guest orchestras each time. Next week the "extra" will come from Quantico; the following week from Fort Dix; the next from the Naval Training Station at Newport, R. I.; the next from Fort Devens; then from Fort Meade—and so on until every Army camp in the country has been heard from.

From New York, "Your Hit Parade" will continue to present the ten top tunes of the week, with the music being provided by Mark Warnow's Orchestra.

Travel Charges Are Answered By Bank Board

Trips Were Necessary To Federal Business, Rep. Cochran Says

Members of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board and officials of subsidiary agencies have presented complete answers to charges of improper travel at Government expense, Representative Cochran (Democrat), of Missouri, told the House yesterday.

He said that investigators of the Comptroller General's office wrote a report making charges of such irregularities without "even opoening" exhibits intended to show there were no irregularities.

"The Comptroller General's report released yesterday covered only the period up to June 30, 1940," Cochran said. "The present Comptroller General, Lindsay Warren, did not leave Congress until November 1 and had no part in the preparation of this report, as he states in a foreword. The examiners who issued the report that they had made no analysis of the material submitted by John H. Fahey, chairman of the bank board, at the time they wrote the report. They had read Mr. Fahey's accompanying letter, but not until yesterday had they gone over the detailed answers to each specific charge. . . .

"Much of the criticism centers around alleged 'week-end travel,' most of it several years ago, by members of the bank board and high officials of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and the Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corporation, agencies of the board. Anyone who understands the emergency nature of the operations of these agencies, particularly in those early years, would hardly question the necessity for week-end work and travel.

"These officials, with their heavy obligations and long hours of overtime, have been commended on the floor of the House for their tireless efforts in behalf of distressed home owners."

Veterans of 1898 Install R. E. Culin For His 33d Year

Seventy-five members of the Gen. Nelson A. Miles Camp No. 1, United Spanish War Veterans, last night witnessed the installation of 1941 officers, including Robert E. Culin, who was sworn in as officer of the guard for the thirty-third consecutive year.

Culin, it was believed, holds a record for long service in a single camp office. P. E. Shomette became adjutant for the fourteenth consecutive time.

Other officers installed by Maj. Samuel J. McWilliams included: Joseph Thornberg, commander; Vincent A. Osterman, senior vice commander; James M. Bennett, junior vice commander, and William Greenberg, officer of the day.

Contract Bridge

There is at least one widely known New York bridge player, Dr. Richard H. Ecker, once holder of the national individual masters' championship, who is a firm believer in the "queen-over-the-jack" theory. This theory is based upon the supposition that the jack has been finessed and lost a trick to the queen in some previous deal and that, no matter how often the cards may be shuffled subsequently, the relative positions of these two cards remain unchanged.

Whether the theory is sound or unsound is not here debated. This is the story of how Dr. Ecker won a top score, making an extra trick at a precarious six no-trump contract on one of the most discussed hands of the recent Philadelphia nationals. The cards and bidding are shown in today's box.

Dr. Ecker did not want to make a choice between the two suits held by his partner. Obviously the bidding showed longer clubs, but few would visualize the seven-six distribution that actually exists, no matter how fine the partnership might be.

Seven clubs can be made easily because the club jack is singleton, but no pair played that contract.

The doctor's queen-over-the-jack theory stood him in good stead in the play of the hand. He won the first trick in his own hand with the ace, then led a club, and the ace dropped the jack from the East hand. Now came the test. The spade jack was led from dummy and East refused to cover. Believing in his theory, South played the deuce; and when the jack held, the rest of the hand was a lay-down.

The distribution of the spade suit illustrates a situation called in bridge circles a "backward" finesse. In other words, the one way in which all the tricks in that suit may be won, is to find either the ten doubleton in the West hand, or, in the event East covers with the queen doubleton, to develop his partner's ten, to finesse dummy's nine against it after taking the ace.

Fashion Show Reveals 10 Ways To Look Smart This Spring

By Mary Elizabeth Plummer
Associated Press Staff Writer

New York, Jan. 10.—Here are ten ways for women to look up to date this spring, summarized from the two-day $1,000,000 show "Fashion Futures":

1. Choose a hat that is reasonably sane (not too grimly reasonable) and above all, becoming; and wear it straight—not cocked over one eye

2. Brighten your Navy blue outfit, if you choose one, with "pursuit red" accessories, white touches, or a pink petticoat that occasionally shows when a spring breeze lifts your hemline. Or——

3. Choose a cape outfit—solid color full-length wool cape over silk dress, hip-length wool cape over wool dress, maybe in two tones of a color; floor-length flowing Jersey cape over evening gown, or——

4. Buy a bright, slim reefer coat—spring green, Parma violet, or Chinatown red, or——

5. Wear a slim little two-piece suit, with either a plain or peplum jacket. And——

6. Consider green as the leading new spring color, with all the beiges, off-whites and light browns in a prominent place; Navy still good; combinations of black and white popular.

7. Be sure your new outfit doesn't have a "football shoulder," but a softer, feminine shoulder, sloping, dropping, but not drooping.

8. Choose either a clinging silhouette or a billowy skirted gown for evening; maybe a pale chiffon or marganza with long, full sleeves, or a picture dress harking back to the 1850's.

9. Have a South American, Greek, British, Chinese or Turkish note in your costume. Or maybe a Maharanee turban. Or a good old United States patriotic emblem somewhere.

10. ——and after it's paid for, don that "pure-browed look."

Laid-Off Man's Vote Held Valid In Bargaining

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 10.—The United States Circuit Court today upheld a National Labor Relations Board order permitting employes temporarily laid off to participate in collective bargaining voting at the plant where they had worked.

A "man who is laid off with reasonable expectation of being called back as soon as the employer's business picks up may well be concerned in the working conditions to which he will probably return and feel a lively interest in the selection of a collective bargaining agent," the court ruled. "It is not unreasonable to include such a man in the voting unit."

The court affirmed, with minor modifications, an order of the Labor Board designating the C. I. O.'s United Automobile Workers of America, Local No. 338, as bargaining agent for employes of the Marlin-Rockwell Corporation at Jamestown, N. Y.

In the election, won by the union, 175 to 155, some 114 former employes laid off because of lack of work, voted with the sanction of the NLRB.

The company contended they were not eligible because they had been "discharged for cause."

The Labor Board held yesterday that newsboys who sell the Los Angeles News, Herald, Times and Examiner were in effect employes of the four papers and entitled to collective bargaining as such.

The board overruled a contention that the relationship between the newspapers and newsboys was that of vendor and vendee.

Holy Cross Order to Bring Offices Here

The congregation of the Holy Cross has transferred its generalate from Notre Dame University, South Bend, Ind., to the Capital, where it will establish headquarters in a building leased from the Carmelite College, 150 Rhode Island Avenue Northeast, it was announced yesterday.

Nine officials of the order will move into the Rhode Island Avenue headquarters, including the Very Rev. Albert Cousineau, C. S. C., superior general, who will arrive Monday.

Accompanying Father Cousineau, who is now in Montreal, will be the Rev. William Doheny, an assistant general of the order.

Already in Washington where they have been working for several months to prepare the new headquarters are Brother Ephrem, the Rev. Alfred Charron and Brother Adhemar, all assistants general, as well as general treasurer and steward, Brother Bernard.

With approximately 1,400 priests and brothers, the Holy Cross Order conducts schools, colleges and parishes in 11 dioceses and archdioceses in this country, including Notre Dame, the University of Portland and St. Edward's University at Austin, Tex.

The order is also active in Canada, France, Poland and India.

From its founding in 1837 to 1880 the generalate was located in Le Mans, France. In the latter year it was moved to Notre Dame when the Very Rev. Edward Sorin, founder of the university, was named superior general, and the general house was transferred.

D. C. Building Owners Oppose Rent Increases

Association Sees No Excuse for Seeking Profit in Emergency

The present national emergency presents no justification for increasing apartment and office building rents, according to a statement issued yesterday by David B. Karrick, president of the Building Owners and Managers Association of the District of Columbia.

"There is no more excuse," said Karrick, "for an owner to take advantage of the national emergency than for a manufacturer engaged in making munitions to demand unfair prices for his product."

Karrick's statement followed a meeting at which the association voted to maintain existing rent levels "as long as operating costs do not materially rise or real estate taxes go up."

Members of the organization control or own more than 100 buildings containing approximately 8,000 apartment units. Explaining the group's action, Karrick said:

"Housing, we well recognize, plays an important part in the national defense program. By endeavoring to hold rents at their present levels, owners will be doing their share in aiding that program.

Members of the association, Karrick continued, feel that owners should not take advantage of any emergency that may arise to boost rents. He said they want to do all within their power to prevent increases, but pointed out that there are some 30,000 owners and doubted "that any group can control this large number of people."

Bond Is Lowered, But Tomadelli Remains in Jail

Calling the $75,000 bond set for Count Jwan J. Tomadelli "rather shocking," Justice James W. Morris reduced it to $15,000 in the District Court yesterday.

Tomadelli, an orchid fancier and art collector, was not able to post the $15,000 and remained in jail last night.

Seized Tuesday night, Tomadelli was held on a charge of defrauding Ernest Swingle, Red Bank, N. J., of $2,300, purporting to have invented a "cold light" device.

New Kind of Marriage Contract

Husband Loses Shirt to Wife Who Already Wore the Pants

By the Associated Press

Atlanta, Jan. 10.—Leland O'Callaghan ate the breakfast his wife prepared for him, pushed back his chair and said he was ready to go to court and answer her suit for more household expense money.

The couple and their respective attorneys then appeared in Fulton County Civil Court. Mrs. O'Callaghan had filed a complaint stating her husband failed to carry out a contract he signed to pay her $200 monthly for household expenses.

O'Callaghan, she averred, failed by some $100 monthly to carry out the agreement in the last year. Under the contract, Mrs. O'Callaghan said she was to do the buying for the family. Instead, she told Judge T. O. Hathcock, O'Callaghan did most of the buying and purchased some things she did not need and failed to buy other needed items.

Judge Hathcock, ruling O'Callaghan surrendered the right to do the family buying when he signed the contract, awarded a $1,000 verdict for Mrs. O'Callaghan.

O'Callaghan's attorney moved for a new trial. The judge asked both attorneys to dig into the law and let him know what they find and said he would rule on the new trial motion later.

Bride, 13, Is Sure She'll Be Happy

Logan, W. Va., Jan. 10.—Mrs. Bessie Cook Stepp, a bride at 13, sees no reason why she and her husband, Robert Stepp, 20, can't be "as happy as other married folks."

Bessie told fellow pupils in the seventh grade at Omar yesterday that she would quit school soon to begin housekeeping. She and Stepp, lamphouse foreman for the West Virginia Coal & Coke Co., were married December 26 at Inez, Ky.

"I love him and he loves me," the bride said, "and there's no reason why our marriage can't be as happy as other married folks'."

Bomb Squad Gets Sunday School Lesson

Philadelphia, Jan. 10. — The bomb squad was called out and 30 policemen detailed to keep back a crowd of hundreds last night after a man reported he had seen a suspicious-looking character drop a package at the side entrance of the Baptist Temple and drive away hurriedly.

The package, addressed to Dr. Daniel A. Poling, Temple pastor and world president of the Christian Endeavor, was thoroughly soaked in a bucket of oil.

Lieut. Albert Granitz, of the bomb squad, then gingerly opened it up—a batch of Dr. Poling's sermons which the printer's son had been late in delivering.
